JOHANNESBURG - A car bomb rocked central Johannesburg near two African National Congress offices on Sunday, 48 hours before the start of South Africa's elections, killing 9 people and wounding 92.

Although the bombing appeared to be intended to disrupt the election and intimidate voters, party leaders across a broad political spectrum condemned it as a "cowardly act" and said it would achieve nothing except to strengthen the determination of most South-Africans to vote.

The bomb, which police estimated weighed 70 to 90 kilograms (155 to 200 pounds), exploded a block from both the national and regional headquarters of the ANC.

Among the victims was an ANC candidate for the regional assembly of the new nonracial Parliament, Susan Keane, who was killed as she was driving to the regional headquarters for a

Serbs Pull Back Weapons In Face of NATO Threat

By Roger Cohen
New York Times Service

ZAGREB, Croatia - Bosnian Serbian forces, bowing to a NATO ultimatum, retreated aday from Gorazde as the United Nations and NATO papered over differences and determined that immediate air strikes against the Serbs were no longer warranted.

The Serbian withdrawal was spotty, interspersed with mortar and sniper fire, and clearly fell short of the conditions set by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for the Serbs to avoid air strikes. But Yasushi Akashi, the senior UN official here and the man who rebuffed NATO requests to bomb on Saturday, declared that the momentum achieved was satisfactory.

"The situation is not perfect, but the progress is substantial," he said. "If you apply a strict standard you will not be totally satisfied. But the Serbs have moved from refusal, to reluctance, to compliance and now toward full compliance, and you have to consider this."

The Serbs now face a second NATO deadline - the withdrawal of their heavy weapons beyond 20 kilometers (12 miles) from Gorazde by 1 A.M. GMT on Wednesday. Mr. Akashi said there would be "not much flexibility on that

There have been disappointments in the past in my dealing with the Serbian leadership, but I feel this should not deter me from negotiating," Mr. Akashi said. "I do not have the huxury of using high moral and ethical standards. I have to negotiate to the end, and now I am expecting the Serbs to come up to our expectations in their compliance."

UN peacekeeping forces, comprised chiefly of a Ukrainian company and 14 military ob-servers, deployed Sunday on both banks of the Drina River in Gorazde with a mission to report on compliance with the cease-fire and the extent of the Serbian withdrawal. Their reports suggested a tense but marginally improved situation.

Serbian forces were said to have withdrawn their tanks and big guns beyond a distance of three kilometers from the city center, but some infantry and light arms remained within this

As they retreated, Mr. Akashi said, the Serbs burned Muslim homes and blew up the town's water-treatment plant. A Bosnian Army mortar hit the town's arms factory, he said.

The continuing acts of violence and the pres-ence of Serbian troops within the three-kilometer radius of the city center were in clear violation of NATO's ultimatum, which said the Serbs would face air strikes if they did not immediately cease their assault on the UNdeclared "safe area" and withdraw their forces beyond 3 kilometers by early Sunday morning, But as at Sarajevo in February, where he chose to exercise restraint although the Serbian withdrawal of heavy weapons was not completed by a NATO deadline, Mr. Akashi again opted for prudence. The presence of UN forces in Gorazde now makes NATO air strikes much more unlikely.

A major reason for Mr. Akashi's stance is clearly that a NATO assault would pose a direct threat to the more than 16,000 UN personnel in Bosnia. The Serbs have told Mr. Akashi they will be "merciless" toward UN forces in the event of air strikes.

Mr. Akashi's position prompted a sharp clash Saturday with Manfred Wörner, the NATO secretary-general, who was in favor of bombing the Serbs when they failed to heed NATO's ultimatum to the letter.

The dispute underscored the difficulty of reconciling an avowedly neutral UN peacekeeping mission with NATO plans to use force in a way that could quickly endanger the peace-

But Sunday the UN and NATO closed ranks. Lieutenant General Bertrand de Lapresle, commander of UN forces in the former Yugoslavia, said in Zagreb that he was in regular contact the NATO commander in charge of air operations over Bosnia, Admiral Leighton W. Smith Jr., and there were no differences of view

We have been talking every day and night and our points of view are in complete accor-

However, it is clear that NATO and the United Nations here have in fact had great difficulty in reconciling their views.

NATO is eager to prove its credibility, which has been less than convincing over the two years of the Bosnian war and was undermined earlier this month when two pinprick air at-tacks on Gorazde failed to halt the Serbian

But Mr. Akashi and the lieutenant general who commands the UN troops in Bosnia, Sir Michael Rose, are much more concerned about the risk to their personnel and to the faltering quest for a peace settlement. "Nobody is telling us what the next stage would be after an air strike," Mr. Akashi said.

These problems were evident Sunday as the British and French governments, which had endorsed the NATO decision, balked at sending peacekeeping forces into Gorazde to monithe cease-fire because of the danger they might face.

In the end, UN officials said, a British company did set out from Sarajevo, with a platoon of Russians and a platoon of Egyptians, but the French declined. The forces will join the Ukrainians already in the town.

Mr. Akashi said he was encouraged by the fact that there had been no fire against UN personnel in Gorazde and the evacuation of wounded in six helicopters was proceeding. British and French helicopters evacuating 85 wounded Muslims arrived in Sarajevo Sunday

European Currency Dream Revives

By Tom Buerkle onal Herald Tribune

BRUSSELS - The prospects of a single European currency later this decade, considered virtually dead just a few months ago in the wake of repeated monetary crises, are being taken very seriously once again by politicians and investors.

The newfound optimism is driven by the remarkable stability of exchange rates in Europe since narrow fluctuation limits were abandoned last August, a stability that has endured despite the turmoil in financial markets caused by the recent upsurge in interest rates worldwide, officials and analysts say. With the notable exception of Britain, European governments have continued to peg their policies and currencies to Germany's instead of taking advantage of the lifting of tight exchange-rate limits to slash rates aggressively.

"The upshot is that their monetary policy, even reinforced, is now geared sol objective of exchange-rate stability." That policy goal has brought inflation and interest rates closer together than ever, a key requirement for advancing to economic and mone-

PARIS - Throughout his political lifetime, Richard Nixon was a figure of bitter controversy and passionate emotion among Americans, and a cause of misunderstanding between Americans and foreigners. The misunderstanding abroad existed among those who admired him as well as those who hated him up until his death of a stroke Friday in a New York City

In Western Europe, the Communist parties and Soviet propaganda agencies described Mc-

Carthyism as the rise of fascism in America. Mr. Nixon acquired the reputation abroad of a disreputable and dangerous rightist politician. This derived from a misunderstanding both of McCarthyism and of Richard Nixon.

McCarthyism was a revival of an old-fashioned American style of populist xenophobia, in the tradition of the anti-Bolsbevik, antianarchist and implicitly anti-Semitic hysteria that followed the First World War, and the anti-immigrant and anti-Catholic movements of the 19th century. NAPLES - The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has developed a detailed plan for massive air strikes around Gorazde in an effort to crush Bosnian Serbian military units and force the Serbian leadership back to the bargaining table. military sources said Sunday.

The air attacks, which would target at least two-dozen ammunition storage sites, fuel dumps, command bunkers and gun emplace-ments within a 20-kilometer (12mile) radius around Gorazde, could be launched immediately if Serbian forces resumed their shelling of the battered city, the sources

"The idea," an official said, would be to make it something the Serbs would never, ever, ever want to experience again.

Such an intense and protracted bombing campaign, which could last over the course of several days, would mark a dramatic escalation from the pinprick, tit-for-tat at-tacks launched on April 10 and 11 in support of besieged United Na-tions forces in Gorazde.

NATO officials said Sunday that simply the threat of such wholesale bombing which would require ap-proval from senior UN officials, may have contributed to the Serbs' pullback from the outskirts of Gor-

Nevertheless, NATO planners recognize several potential pitfalls in broadening the air attacks, including the prospect that Serbian soldiers could retaliate against the 13,000 UN troops in Bosnia and the difficulty — demonstrated in Vietnam and elsewhere — of forcing a recalcitrant enemy to negotiate by bombing him into submis-

NATO's highest authority, the North Atlantic Council, agreed Friday to authorize air attacks unless Serbian forces immediately halted their bombardment of Gorazde and withdrew all heavy weapons from a "military exclusion zone," extending for 20 kilometers affording opportunities for confrom the town's center, by Wednesday morning.

The massive attack envisioned in the current NATO plan reflects the philosophy of Admiral Leighton W. Smith, Jr., NATO commander in southern Europe, that overwhelming force is more likely to achieve the desired political results than tentative, limited strikes, according to NATO sources. The sources said that philosophy was shared by Admiral Smith's recently departed predecessor in Naples, Admiral Jeremy M. Boorda.

Similar sweeping attacks have been drafted, if needed, to ensure the security of Bihac, Srebrenica, Tuzla and Zepa, other UN-desig-nated "safe areas" where NATO has demanded the withdrawal of heavy Serb weapons within a 20kilometer radius, according to miliwhere else," an officer said.

Although Serbian anti-aircraft ennners demonstrated their ability to shoot down NATO jets last week by destroying a British Sea Harrier over Gorazde with a surface-to-air missile, NATO planners hope that a broad air campaign could be conducted with minimal losses.

In contrast to the close air support offered thus far, the intense attacks envisioned under the current plan would not require pilots to fly "up close and personal," as Admiral Smith recently put it, in coordinating their strikes with UN forward air controllers.

Yet the challenges of eviscerating Serbian forces within the exclusion zones around the safe areas are still formidable. Much of the terrain is mountainous and forested, cealment to forces particularly

New York Times Service MOSCOW — In a diplomatic about-face, Russia dropped all objections to NATO's threat to bomb the Bosnian Serbs around Gorazde, and a few hours later the Serbs an-

The reversal underlines the juggling act Russian diplomats have performed for two years. Russia has always had strong ties to the Serbs and now, as Russia becomes visibly more nationalistic, it has tried to avoid jeopardizing those ties. Nor can the government afford to anger centrists and rightists in Parliament.

On the other hand, President Boris N. Yeltsin does not want to alienate the West.

At times, the balance has been impossible to maintain. Even Saturday, as Mr. Kozyrev was denouncing the Serbs, his ambassador to the United Nations, Yuli M. Vorontsov said the UN decision to extend its bombing threat be-stopped the shelling, so the conclusion that the Russians' statement was influential is hard to unnecessary.

Mr. Kozyrev's fierce new position, so different from ones he has held, also shows a split between the conservative Defense Ministry and the Western-leaning Foreign Ministry.

As soon as he and his special envoy for the Bosnian region, Vitali I. Churkin, realized that their diplomatic effort was not taken seriously by the Serbs, both men began to denounce them. The Defense Ministry, on the other hand, argued that opposition to the Serbs was not

Italy Parliament Speaker Draws Fire For Her Praise of a Mussolini Policy

ROME — The new leader of the needed a history lesson. lower house of Parliament, Irene Pivetti, was facing a flood of criticism Sunday for perceived anti-Semitic and pro-fascist remarks.

With her election to that post this month, Miss Pivetti, 31, a member of the federalist Northern League, became the youngest parliamentary speaker in Italy since World War II. But her first week in the post was called a "disaster" by La Repubblica newspaper after scathing criti-cism from Roman Catholics, Jews

The latest furor erupted over an interview that Miss Pivetti, a conservative Roman Catholic, gave to the weekly Italia Settimanale, in which she voiced admiration for the policies toward women of the Fascist dictator Benito Mussolini.

While Miss Pivetti said she did not support fascism, she said she "could see all the good things fascism did for Italy. "Mussolini had the most advanced policy toward women — Northern League and the neo-lasand nothing was done after him in

Miss Pivetti, a former journalist, has been a member of Parliament since 1992, Her critics regard her as a religious radical whose comments have bordered on the anti-Semitic. Some of her remarks were cited last year by the World Jewish Council in a report on anti-Semitism.

"I think it's time the world knew about Irene Pivetti," said Tullia Zevi, president of Italy's Union of Jewish Communities. "I would call her a fundamentalist Catholic whose views on the church's dia-logue with Judaism and other rehgions are out of date."

Mrs. Zevi recalled Miss Pivetti's isagreement with Pope John Paul when he proclaimed Jews the elder brothers" of Christians.

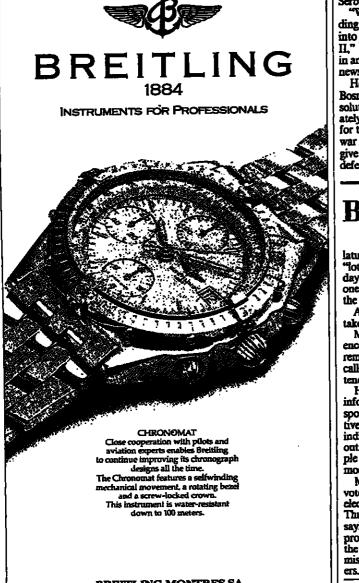

"Pivetti's comment was: I don't see why people who belong to a false religion should be considered our elder brothers," she said. Miss Pivetti has defended herself by saying that no good Catholic denies his religion is the one true

The Anti- Defamation League B'nai B'rith said Miss Pivetti's views predated the 1965 Second Vatican Council, when the Vatican repudiated the notion of collective Jewish guilt for the crucifixion.

THE AMERICAS / A STRATEGY OF OPENNESS Congressmen Vow Action on Quality White House Counsel's Steadying Hand By David E. Rosenbaum New York Times Service WASHINGTON—Ju al leadership power york Times Service Of Air in Jetliners

WASHINGTON — Two chairmen of congressional panels have vowed to take action to improve the quality of air in airline cabins. One of them, Senator Patrick J. Leahy, Democrat of Vermont, who is chairman of the agriculture com-mittee, said that he had undergone the "very unpleasant experience" of being in an airplane that was sprayed with an insecticide before it landed in Australia, one of more than 20 countries requiring such spraying, and would introduce legislation to protect Americans who travel to those countries.

At the same time, Representative James L. Oberstar, Democrat of Minnesota, who is chairman of the aviation subcommittee of the Public Works and Transportation proble Committee, scheduled a hearing for May 18 on the problems of air quality in airline cabins on domesuc flights.

He said the hearings would focus on the health effects of a 50 percent reduction of fresh air in airline cabins that occurred in the late 1980s, and whether this unduly exposed passengers to bacteria, viruses, carbon dioxide and fumes from materials used to construct or maintain

The hearings will also study insecticide spraying and whether smoking should still be permitted on international flights, Mr. Ober-star said. "We need to improve air

WASHINGTON — Six weeks after Lloyd N. Cutler joined the staff to stanch the Whitewater hemorrhage, his influence on White House strategy became un-mistakable last week. That was when Hillary Rodham Clinton broke her silence and fielded every question re-porters could come up with about her family's finances. It was a clear manifestation of the promise Mr. Cutier made when he became White House counsel to make public all the facts on band about the Clintons' investments. After the session Friday, Mr. Cutler disclaimed credit for Mrs. Clinton's decision to go public, saying in a telephone conversa-tion that everyone at the White House agreed that it was the proper course.

But others on the staff said it would never have happened be-fore Mr. Cutler arrived and imoressed on the Clintons the importance of openness.

In an interview last week, Mr. Cutler told how he thinks the Whitewater story will end. "It will just peter out," he said.

"It will leave everybody somewhat dissatisfied, because we're what dissatisfied, because we're not going to get a jury verdict in the end, guilty or not guilty. There will be questions that can't be answered. But people will lose interest. I don't see anything that even remotely resembles Irancontra, Watergate, any kind of misconduct while in office."

At first, his strategy of openness led to embarrassing slips, especially when the White House account of Mrs. Clinton's commodity trading kept changing day after day. Mr. Cutler said such mistakes were the inescapable consequence of trying to get information out quickly.

"You're damned if you do and damned if you don't," Mr. Cutler

"These 15-year-old facts are so complicated and come from so many different record sources that it's very difficult to get all of it straight," he said. "And every day you have to compromise between the press's demand they're going to write the story anyway, and television has to meet its deadlines --- and the lawyer's desire to make sure you have it absolutely straight and have exhausted all the factual material you can get your hands on."

John D. Podesta, the White House staff secretary who has been assigned to field press inqui-ries on Whitewater, said the mood in the White House had changed for the better since Mr. Cutler arrived.

The president's young advisers had confidence that Mr. Cutler was steeped in the ways of Washington and knew how to deal with problems like Whitewater, Mr. Podesta said.

Although no one will say so for attribution, the prevailing view on the staff is that Mr. Cutler's predecessor, Bernard W. Nuss-baum, inadvertently damaged the Clintons by appealing to their predilection for secrecy about their financial affairs. Mr. Cutler, it is said, convinced the Clintons that they needed to make everything public, the sooner the bet-

The most Mr. Cutler would say about this was that questions about the Clintons' personal finances had perhaps been taken too seriously in the past by their staff. "If they'd taken it more lightly, we might have been better off," he said.

Mr. Cutler arrived at the White House on March 8 as developments in the Whitewater case were sprouting like dandelions.

By the time Mr. Cutler got to the White House, several administration officials had been subpoenaed to testify about the meetings before a grand jury. Mr. Nussbaum, who attended some of the meetings, had resigned. When his appointment was an-nounced, Mr. Cutler declared,

Perot Gets Back Talk From Grass Roots

WASHINGTON - Just two months after holding its first nation-

Power struggles between the grass-roots, elected leadership and the Dallas-led paid staff have left once-loyal followers of Mr. Perot disappointed and distillusioned and threaten to weaken his organiza-tion as an effective political force.

Florida, Tennessee, Vermont, Rhode Island, Washington and

Alaska have changed state chairmen since initial state elections were held. Another power struggle is under way in California. "The organization was created in large measure by active and decent and good people all over the country," said Mark Benson, who was a congressional district leader in Florida before quitting. "But at this point, Perot, in fact, really does want to put together an organization of automatons who are out there as window dressing, whom he can use for credibility but whom he does not need for anything else."

Sharon Holman, Mr. Perot's chief spokeswoman, acknowledged there have been problems within the organization, but played down their significance. "There is some settling out, I wouldn't question that," she said. "But I would tell you that in 45 states we have each of the 50 states. These state directors, paid by the Dallas headquarters, were responsible for organizing elections that produced a board of directors and a state chairman in each state, along with congressional district coordinators in almost every district in

But the elected leaders complain that any attempts to make changes in the organization or to initiate programs not already approved by Dallas have been met with resistance or silence. Some claim they are victims of character assassination.

On Feb. 6, with the state leaders standing with him, Mr. Perot told reporters: "This is their organization. They run it, they control it,

Q&A: Toward Greater Stability in Peru

Efrain Goldenberg Schreiber, the prime minister of Peru, was a businessman specializing in import-export trade until he was asked last summer by President Alberto Fujimori to join the government as foreign minister. Mr. Goldenberg, who has been prime minister since February, will be in Europe for a series of official visits next month. He discussed Peru's economic and political outlook with Alan Friedman of the International Herald Tribune.

Q. In April 1992, President Fujimori suspended Peru's constitution, dissolved the National Congress, imposed censorship and arrested journalists and politicians. Under the new constitution he will be allowed to run for re-election next year to a second five-year term. What can you say to those who worry about the state of democracy in Peru?

, items fi

A. You have to understand that in Peru we had 25,000 people killed by terrorists be-tween 1980 and 1990. We needed to take extraordinary steps. Since April 1992 we have had municipal elections, elections for a new congress, and then last November we had a referendum and the new constitution was

Q. The leader of the Shining Path terrorist group, Abimael Guzman, has been arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to life in prison. Yet a bomb was thrown at the U.S.

Embassy in Lima four months ago. Where are you on controlling terrorism? A. It is a thing of the past to a great extent.

Sure, we still have some terrorism problems, but 90 percent of the terrorist leaders are in jail. Peru is no longer a country under terror-Q. But what about that recent bomb in

A. It was hardly a bomb. The U.S. Embassy was hardly touched.

Q. Is Shining Path still working with the drug lords in Peru?

A. Probably, yes, and that problem may remain. But we don't really have a drug problem in Peru. You have a drug problem in the United States and Europe. It is a problem

Q. But what are you doing about the cocaine production? A. You must understand that the coca leaf is a product that has been grown for centuries in our country. These are small farmers who hardly make a living. We are working on a crop substitution program. Q. Let's talk about economic reform. Foreign investors are suddenly coming back to your country. And you are in the process of privatizing your state telephone company.

What is your status report?
A. We raised $2 billion for just 35 percent of the telephone company. We were able to do this because terrorism is not a problem anymore. We are building a sound economic base, and we have financial stability for the first time in many years.

Q. Yet your policy was supposed to be to transfer privatization revenues to social development programs, to alleviating poverty. Until now your structural adjustment program with the International Monetary Fund allows only $450 million of privatization money to go to the anti-poverty program. How can you do more?

A. The minister of economy and finance, Jorge Camet, ended negotiations with the IMF in Washington last week. The IMF now accepts that Peru can spend a total of $875 million on social investment projects.

Q. Isn't the structural adjustment program causing more poverty by forcing numerous layoffs in the public sector?

A. We are in this shape because of decades of an overly regulated economy. Now we are opening up. Of course we need fiscal austerity. We needed cuts in the bureaucracy and state-owned companies.

And we have to control inflation. This year our inflation target is around 20 percent. In 1990 the inflation rate was 7,650 percent. In 1991 it was 150 percent. In 1992 it was 70 percent, and last year it was 39 percent.

Taking the Time To Ensure Safety

Terrorist Attacks and Fires Present the Greatest Risks

International Herald Tribune

CALAIS, France - The Channel Tunnel, one of Europe's biggest construction projects, is also its biggest security headache.

The first few months of operations in the tunnel could be vital to its success, since even the smallest incident is likely to have a large psychological effect,

A few months ago, for example, a British tabloid newspaper ran an alarmist headline, "Tunnel Meltdown!" over a story about a minor short-circuit. That was not encouraging to potential passengers apprehensive about riding deep under the seabed.

A recent report by the Research Institute for the Study of Conflict and Terrorism, in London, gave the tunnel top marks for safety. Its author, Richard Clutterbuck, called the tunnel "far more secure than the London Underground railway system."

Eurotonnel, the British-French consortium, has spent more than $171 million on security and says safety is its top priority. It has delayed introducing full service in the tunnel for several more months, partly to allow for the completion of exhaustive checks on the system.

The size and symbolic value of the project make the tunnel an obvious target for terrorist organizations like the Irish Republican Army. The British government recently announced that it would call for automatic life imprisonment for anyone found guilty of attacking the tunnel. Eurotunnel officials will not discuss measures they have adopted to combat terrorism.

Because the tunnel has a single entry and exit, Mr. Clutterbuck said, there is more incentive for terrorists to "to grab the headlines by blocking it, by a terrorist act, by sabotage or by a hoax call."

As in any complex under-ground system, the biggest danger is from fire and toxic fumes. There are 150 kilometers (93 miles) of tunnels, including separate ones for each direction, and a central service tunnel.

In the event of a serious fire, passengers could be evacuated through the central service tunnel, which is protected by fireproof

Some chemicals, nuclear material and other potentially danger-ous materials will be banned from the tunnel.

There will be a risk of fire from the fuel in cars, buses and trucks, which will be whisked through the tunnel on trains capable of traveling up to 160 kilometers an hour. Passengers will remain in their cars during the journey, a fact that has been strongly criticized by the firemen's union in Britain and by the ferry companies, which since 1974 have been obliged to sepa-rate passengers from their vehicles during the crossing.

Each 800-meter-long shuttle train will carry six crew members to make sure, among other things. that passengers do not smoke.

Standard procedure in case of a fire would be to get the train into the open air as soon as possible. The closed shuttle wagons have fire doors designed to resist blazes for enough time to get to special locations where fires can be smothered with foam. If a serious fire erupted and a train had to stop, crew members would tackle the blaze by evacuating passen-gers and flooding the area with halon gas.

If an explosion occurs, the blast would follow the path of least resistance — the tunnel itself rather than destroy the tunnel lining, experts say. Trains will travel between concrete guides to ensure that even if they derail, they cannot topple over.

Every coal miner knows that the likeliest cause of death underground is not flame but toxic fumes, such as odorless carbon monoxide, which can race through a tunnel faster than a man can run. To combat this danger, the service tunnel is slightly pressurized to keep dangerous gases out, while the system is equipped with ventilators to bring

Other risks being considered in-

• Flooding. Experts say this is highly unlikely because the three tunnels that make up the system were drilled through stable chalk deep beneath the seabed. Rock extracted from the Dover end was so dry that it had to be doused with water to keep down dust.

· Earthquakes. The Channel is not a tremor zone, but the possibility of quakes was taken into account in the tunnel design. "Even if there were an earthquake or a large explosion in the tunnel or on the seabed, the chalk mark would seal itself without letting in the sea." Mr. Chitterbuck said Rabies. Britain is free of rabies and France is not. To prevent any animals slipping through the strict British quarantine laws, Eurotunnel has sunk fences deep in the earth and equipped the tun-nels with "stun mats" to immobilize animals that get through the outer defenses. Experts say the greater danger is from domestic pets imported illegally by passen-from now? In a quarter-century, Paris and Brussels are expected to be only a shade more than two hours away from London by rail. As many as 15 million people will be making the trip every year — up to 800 a train on 60 trains a day. By then, tourists and businessmen bound for overnight stays on the Continent will rub elbows with a new species, the trans-Channel commuter.

"The tunnel will be a physical manifestation of European Union," said Sir Keith Speed, co-chairman of the British parliamentary committee on the Chan-But will it be much else?

On the eve of the May 6 opening ceremonies for the first, fixed, all-weather link between Britain and the Continent, experts agree that in 25 years the tunnel will have been a success. But will it live up to its promotional hype?

"I think the Channel Tunnel is a bit like 1992 and the promise of a single European market," said Alain Guyomarch, deputy director of the European Institute at the London School of Economics. "It was thought that 1992 would change the way people live, and it "The fact is that for all the

But by 25 years from now there will very likely be a massive new construction project — a second Channel tunnel.

"If all the growth figures are right then the tunnel will be approaching its capacity in another 20 years," said Gwyn Prosser, the head of European affairs of the Kent County Council. The county is the site of the tunnel's western terminus, in Folkestone. While the tunnel is unlikely in

Rwanda Talks Fail To Get Started as Fighting Rages On

NAIROBI - Rebel and government forces exchanged heavy mor- cial in the northern Tanzanian tar and gunfire in the Rwandan capital, Kigali, on Sunday, and government envoys failed to show up for negotiations in Tanzania.

"The fighting has been excep-tionally heavy today," said Abdul Kabia, a United Nations spokesman in Kigali.

A Red Cross official, quoted by Radio France Internationale, said Sunday that massacres were coniming in Rwanda's second-largest city, Butare, 75 kilometers (45 miles) southwest of Kigali. The report was monitored by the BBC.

The watchword is the elimination of those who are considered enemies, and no one is spared: children, wives, babies," said the Red Cross official, who was not identi-

Mr. Kabia, interviewed by telephone from Kigali, said govern-ment representatives did not show up in the northeastern Zaire town of Goma on Saturday, where a UN plane was waiting to take them to

He said military officers in Kigali told the United Nations on Sunday that they were unable to contact officials in Gitarama, 38 kilometers southwest of Kigali, where the government fied the fighting two weeks ago.

President Ali Hassan Mwinyi of Tanzania invited Rwanda's government and the rebels for talks to end the carnage, which has claimed the lives of about 100,000 people. Some 2 million Rwandans have fled their homes, and thousands more are barricaded in buildings. The violence began a day after the presidents of Rwanda and Burundi died in a mysterious plane crash in Kigali on April 6. The fighting is between government forces, dominated by the majority Hutu, and the rebels, who are mostly minority Tutsis. Hutu and Tutsis have fought for political su-premacy since the country's independence from Belgium in 1962. The rebels declared a unilateral cease-fire to begin midnight Monday on condition that the govern-ment end all killings in areas it controls within 96 hours. The rebels also demanded that the government accept an international inquiry into the killings and

But Jan Visser, managing director of Delaware North's European operations, said the circus's proposal was a nonstarter: 85 percent to the circus, no exclusive rights to concessions for the joint venture and a term of only two years.
"Under such terms, we couldn't

"East Kent now has more contacts with the north of France than with most other regions of Britain," said Gwyn Prosser, the Kent County Council's head of European affairs. Insularity, while it still exists, is breaking down as people realize that it is easier to go shopping in Calais than London, Mr. Prosser said.

Kent has joined with government adninistrations in northern France and Belgium to form the Trans-Manche Region, which is eligible for regional financing from the European Union. A spokesman for the county council said Kent had received £47 million in European funds since 1987 for projects that include coop-eration on education, employment, tour-ism, transportation and the environment.

So far, the slowly developing sense of regionalism has not translated into any real estate people.

Trevor Kent, a spokesman for the National Association of Estate Agents in Britain, said reliable transportation through the tunnel inevitably will tempt more Britons to buy secondary or even primary homes across the channel, especially professional people who can work from home and those who can take transport costs off their taxes. The tide is unlikely to flow the other way, he said, because homes are much more expensive in southern England. Mr. Prosser, on the other hand, said the idea of large numbers of people moving to France was "fanciful" because each side had deeply ingrained habits and traditions. Nor, unless the tunnel reduces its prices—ranging from £125 to £310 for a round trip with a car—could he see much incentive for people to live in large movement of people from Britain to one country and commute to the other.

Dover is the world's busiest passenger port, with 18.4 million departures and entries last year; and Calais is second, with about 16 million passengers in 1993. The tunnel will bypass both towns. Highspeed trains will speed passengers between Pasie and London in less than tween Paris and London in less than three hours, while shuttle trains will move cars and freight directly from one high-way system to another in about one hour. According to the Kent Impact Study on economic prospects, the opening of ty, close down some marginal ferry lines and result in up to 15,000 lost jobs,

But the tunnel is expected to create new business rather than merely take passengers and freight away from the ferries. The two ferry operators are introducing huge new ships that will enable them to offer a service that is at least as regular and almost as fast at the tunnel, as well as being significantly cheaper. No one is writing off the ferries.

Nor is the tunnel a mere connection under the Channel. It is the hub of a network of new highways on either end and is connected to Paris, although not yet to London, by high-speed railway

The tunnel "puts Calais and the surrounding region more in the heart of Europe," said Roland Deplace, the Ca-lais representative of France's government planning agency.

NIXON: A Different Picture at Home and Overseas

Senator Joseph McCarthy was that the Hiss case involved serious accusations of espionage, although Mr. Hiss was eventually convicted only of perjury. Mr. Nixon's political exploitation of the affair was crude, but in his pursuit of Mr. Hiss he dealt with real issues, which was not the case for Senator McCarthy.

What became known as McCarthyism was the demagogic harassment of large numbers of people who had signed manifestos, joined demonstrations and belonged to Communist front organizations, or to the Communist Party itself, during the years when to do all of that was not only perfectly legal but politically correct.

Mr. Nixon's period as Dwight D. Eisenhower's vice president caused foreign observers to take a second look at him, as Mr. Eisenhower was all but universally admired abroad for sober and responsible conduct of American foreign policy.

It did not have the same effect in the United States, since Mr. Eisenhower's endorsement of his vice president's candidature for the presidency in 1960 was so lukewarm as to amount to a disavowal. Mr. Nixon was elected president in 1968 because in the midst of the great and decisive American national crisis provoked by the Vietnam War, Mr. Nixon promised a conservative, he seemed capable of providing that way out, which his rival, Lyndon B. Johnson's vice president, Hubert H. Humphrey, did not.

The doubts that persisted abroad about Mr. Nixon's judgment and political morality were not really dissipated until the beginning of the 1970s, late in his first presidential term. The causes for this change were his policy of detente with the Soviet Union and his arms-control agreements with Moscow, his opening of U.S. relations with China and his withdrawal of American forces from Viet-

This last was no victory, but was seen abroad as a reasonably adroit disguise for inevitable defeat. This was the exact contrary to what Mr. Nixon, and his Secretary of State. Henry A. Kissinger, claimed was the case. Their denials were taken abroad, mistakenly, as subtlety. Many were also ready to accept Mr. Nixon's argument that domestic critics had decisively under-mined the U.S. position in Viet-way out - and because he was a balance. The reality was that China played the American link against its Soviet rival, to no profit to the United States. The opening to Moscow would have been much more difficult for a Democratic administration, however, and it contributed to that ferment in Soviet political circles which eventually was to produce glasnost and perestroika.

Mr. Nixon's downfall in the Watergate scandal was generally misperceived abroad as the result of a political plot. The significance Americans attached to his violation, in this affair, both of the law and of his constitutional position. was not generally understood.

Wiretapping and burglary of a rival party's premises seemed in many West European and Asian political circles to be deplorable but unsurprising forms of political conduct. Americans were thought "puritans" for becoming so excited about it, a judgment which ignored the fact that the cultural origin of American society is indeed Calvinist and Puritan.

Thus the 37th president was seen abroad, when his political career ended, as more victim than wrongdoer. His subsequent rehabilitation in American opinion as a foreign policy wise man owed much to the fact that, abroad, he had never lost postwar period to recognize the potential of anti-communism, and he made that issue his trademark in the three California House and Senate campaigns he won from 1946 to 1950.

Twenty years later, when campus and urban riots and the street warfare at the Democratic convention of 1968 ignited public opinion, it was Mr. Nixon who pushed the "law and order" issue to the center of the stage - where it has remained ever since.

Despite his homely looks and his grave, humoriess style, he was one of the first national politicians to recognize the power of television and try to use it systematically to his advantage.

He saved his vice-presidential place on the 1952 Republican ticket - after controversy arose over a privately funanced expense fund in his Senate office — by making a televised appeal directly to the

The success of that "Checkers speech" and the renown he won as vice president with his televised "kitchen debate" with Nikita S. Khruschev instilled enough confidence in Mr. Nixon that he encouraged Dwight D. Eisenhower to sign legislation in 1960 setting up the first televised presidential debates.

He lost those debates - especially the first one, with the largest audience - to John F. Kennedy, and that may well have been the margin of his hairbreadth defeat.

But in his dogged way, Mr. Nixon kept after it, and when he ran again in 1968 the "Ask Richard Nixon" sessions, staged by the television adviser Roger Ailes with carefully screened but seemingly ordinary voters, became the forenumers of what is now a standard campaign format. Mr. Nixon was a crucial transition figure in the history of the modern Republican Party. For the better part of four decades, only Mr. Eisenhower, the smiling and victorious World War II commander, was able to break the Democrats' grip on the White House When Barry Goldwater lost by a landslide to Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964, serious talk arose about the problematic future of the Republicans.

But Mr. Nixon helped nurse it back to health, campaigning con-stantly for the party in the highly successful midterm campaign of 1966, though he was nominally just a New York City lawyer, and then reclaiming the presidential nomi-nation in 1968.

Both his presidency and his cam-paigns of 1968 and 1972 embodied the struggle to bridge the gulf be-tween a mainstream Republican Party and an emerging populism of the right that encompassed hostility to the civil rights revolution, anger toward the sexual liberation and free speech movements of the 1960s and the hard-hat attack on the anti-Vietnam War movement. Watergate transformed American politics. The scandal and the forced resignation of the president sharply increased public distrust of and cynicism toward government, justified a wide range of congressionally imposed restrictions on presidential power and authority. helped to give birth to an influential generation of Democrats, and gave impetus to the congressional reforms of the mid-1970s. The focus of this distrust on the presidency created a favorable climate in Congress for the enactment of the War Powers Act, which required presidential notification of Congress within 48 hours of troop deployments and congressional au-thorization within 60 days. The measure was passed at the height of the Watergate controversy, after Mr. Nixon had dismissed Archibald Cox as special prosecutor. Mr. Nixon left few institutions — or people — of his era un-

Indonesia Fears More Assaults on Its Chinese

By Philip Shenon New York Tunes Service

SINGAPORE — Anti-Chinese riots in Indonesia have led to one death and have alarmed government and husiness leaders who fear that the violence could spread to other parts of the vast Southeast Asian nation, which has an economy dominated by ethnic Chinese families and a work force consisting mainly of ethnic Malays.

The riots began the week before last in Medan, Indonesia's third largest city, paralyzing the north Sumatran area for several days as thousands of laborers took to the streets to demand higher wages and an explanation for the death last month of a union activist.
On April 15, an ethnic Chinese factory owner, Kwok Joe Lip, 53, was stoned and beaten to death in his car as he tried to drive to his factory in hopes of protecting it from the crowds of rioters in Medan. More than 100 shops and businesses owned by ethnic Chinese families in the city were said to have been vandalized.

Tuesday, thousands of looters were reported to have descended with machetes and iron picks on a shopping mall in central Medan owned by Chinese.

The ethnic Chinese, who make up only about 3 percent of the population of Indonesia, quickly became the target of the demonstrators, as they have in years past. Leaflets that circulated among the crowds described the wealth of ethnic Chinese samilies and charged they were exploiting Indonesian factory workers, who are mostly of ethnic Malay stock.

To quell the riots, the Indonesian Army flooded the streets of Medan with up to 2,500 soldiers and has warned union leaders against trying to revive the demonstrations.

"Jakarta has been a relatively nervous place this week," a diplo-

DEATH OF A PRESIDENT / CAREER OF CRISES

Richard Nixon, 1913-94: Triumph and Tumult

The Stigma of the Watergate Scandal Tended to Obscure His Accomplishments

By John Herbers New York Times Service

A CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF TH

The state of the s

To millions of Americans, Richard Milhous Nixon was the most puzzling and fascinating politician of his time. He was a man of high intelligence and innovative concepts whose talents, especially in international affairs, were widely respected by friend and foe. Yet he was so motivated by hatreds and fears that he abused his and abused his powers and resorted to lies and Many felt an intense dislike for him on the ground that he rose to power through demagoguery and defamation. But among many others he inspired an intense loyalty, particularly among those who identified with his humble beginnings and with his hostility toward intellectuals, liberals, socialists and others he regarded as archenemies.

His career was a tumultuous roller-coaster ride of victory, Crisis, defeat, revival, triumph, ruin and, in later life, re-emergence as an elder

Yet he never received the honors and accolades he most certainly would have if he had not been forced to resign the presidency in the face of certain impeachment for the cover-up of a cheap political burglary of Democratic Party offices and other illegal acts of domestic espionage, all documented by Oval Office tape re-

Still, he never confessed the "high crimes and misdemeanors" of which he was accused in articles of impeachment, approved by the House Judiciary Committee, that precipitated his resignation in August 1974.

"If the president does it, that makes it legal," he told David Frost in a celebrated television interview three years after he was pardoned by his successor, Gerald R. Ford.

So strong was the stigma of Watergate that it tended to obscure Mr. Nixon's accomplishments. In foreign affairs, with Henry A. Kissinger as national security adviser and secretary of state, these included establishing relations with Communist China, initiating detente and nuclear arms control treaties with the Soviet Union, and opening the way for Egypt to break with the Soviet bloc.

In the domestic area, his record appears better through the prism of subsequent events, several scholars say, than it did at the time. In his administration, a huge expansion of the food stamp program went a long way toward lessening hunger in America. The Environmental Protection Act authorized vast resources and regulation for cleaning the country's air, land and water.

Mr. Nixon reshaped the Supreme Court through his appointment of a chief justice and three associate justices on a basis of ideological

Yet his accomplishments were marred by his methods, his motives and his ambiguities. Ending the long divisive war in Southeast Asia took four years from the time he was elected president on a peace pledge, years in which American society was scarred by riots and rebellions against the efforts to force peace through bombings and incursions into new territory.

In all matters he centralized power around himself and a few aides in the White House and sought to broaden the authority of the executive branch at the expense of Congress and the courts. He tried to use the bureaucracy against

It was Mr. Nixon's personality and character that most caught the attention of Americans as, always amid great controversy, he went from Southern California to the House of Representatives, to the Senate, to the White House as Dwight D. Eisenhower's vice president, to the presidency, and to private citizen as the first president to have resigned the office. In between, he was defeated for the presidency by John F. Kennedy in 1960 and in 1962 for governor of California by Edmund G. "Pat"

He had no fixed ideology, no particular place on the political spectrum. He was a loner with no lasting alliances with other prominent Republican leaders. His life was a series of contradictions. He preached the simple Protestant ethic of hard work and morality and was prim in dress and manner. Yet the Watergate tapes, as well as the testimony of some associates, showed that he could be profane, amoral and power-driven.

He invited crises and, until the Watergate scandals closed in, thrived on them, but he felt depressed after a victory and in times of tran-quillity, as he wrote in his book "Six Crises."

The future president was born on Jan. 9, 1913, the second of five sons, in Yorba Linda, California, then a farming community of 200 people near Los Angeles. His father owned a general store and filling station.

He daydreamed of faraway places; worked hard in school; lectured his brothers to be more conscientious; played football with zest even though he was not good at it; pursued music, acting and debating and competed for leader-ship positions in school, and went four times a week to a fundamentalist Quaker church.

After high school, he wanted to go to Harvard or Yale. But there was no money for that. So he stayed four more years in the community he wished desperately to escape and entered Whittier College. There he sharpened his debating talents, was elected president of the fresh-man class and of the student body for three years, and took acting lessons.

Graduating from Whittier second in his class, Mr. Nixon won a scholarship to the Duke University Law School. He was elected president of the Duke Bar Association and graduated third in his class. He was admitted to the California bar in November 1937.

He became active in civic groups, taught Sunday school and acted in a little theater group. It was in the theater that he met Thelma Catherine Ryan, who taught typing and short-hand at Whittier High School. They were mar-

When the United States entered World War II, Mr. Nixon became a lawyer with the Office of Price Administration, an experience he loathed. After seven months he got a navy commission and became an operations officer with the South Pacific Combat Air Transport

At war's end he was surprised to receive a letter from a committee of California Republicans asking if he was interested in running for Congress. He jumped at the chance to challenge Jerry Voorhis, a five-term incumbent and a New Deal liberal.

When the campaign for the 1946 election began, Mr. Nixon, far behind his opponent, developed a technique he would use over the years: discredit your opponent before your own campaign starts.

Mr. Nixon issued a statement billing himself as a "clean, forthright young American who fought for the defense of his country in the stinking mud and jungles of the Solomons," which he had not, while his opponent "stayed safely behind the front in Washington."

In another statement, with reference to the political action committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, he said: "I welcome the opposition of the PAC with its Communist principles and huge slush fund." Mr. Voorhis's defense that the PAC had not endorsed him and that it was not Communist did not keep Mr. Nixon from winning.

The Alger Hiss case made Mr. Nixon a national celebrity. In August 1948, Mr. Hiss, a highly regarded former State Department official was accused by Whittaker Chambers, a former Communist and then a senior editor at Time magazine, of having given Mr. Chambers secret government documents for delivery to the Soviet Union in 1937 and 1938, Mr. Hiss denied the charges and swore he did not know "a man named Whittaker Chambers."

The matter might have been dropped had Mr. Nixon not doggedly pursued it as head of a special subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. After Mr. Hiss filed a libel suit against Mr. Chambers, the latter produced five rolls of microfilm of documents he said had been passed to him by Mr. Hiss. Mr. Hiss was indicted for perjury, and after two trials was convicted in 1950.

buried on the library grounds next to his wife. Pat, who died last year. In his proclamation and in a separate message to Congress, Mr. Clinton said the nation "will always owe him a special debt for open-forts to improve the nation's welfare, law enforcement and health care systems. tive assistant, told The Associated Press Saturday that Mr. Nixon's daughters "are very upset and distraught."

A Clinton administration official said Mr.

Nixon's decision to forgo a state ceremony had been made in the last year or so during consultations with the Defense Department office that oversees state funerals. Pentagon officials declined comment.

In 1950, Mr. Nixon, who had his eye on the Senate seat vacated by Sheridan Downey, a Democrat, was supported by major California newspapers and unopposed in the Republican primary. Representative Helen Gahagan Doug-las, a liberal supporter of the Truman administration, emerged as the Democratic candidate.
From the beginning Mr. Nixon set out to discredit his opponent's loyalty to the American system. He distributed more than half a million pink-colored fliers that said Mrs. Douglas had "deservedly earned the title of 'the pink Mrs. Douglas was actually denounced by pro-Communist groups as a "capitalist war-monger," and it was in this campaign that Mr. Nixon was first called "Tricky Dick." But he won by 680,000 votes after a campaign that supplied Democrats with anti-Nixon ammunition for years.

It seemed strange to some that Dwight D. Eisenhower, running for president as a moderate, picked Richard Nixon as his running mate in 1952, although politically it made sense in many respects. But the campaign was barely under way when it was revealed that 78 wealthy California businessmen had raised $18,235 to defray political expenses for Mr. Nixon.

His defense was a virtuoso performance. He maintained that he had done nothing wrong, disclosed his mortgages and other financing to show he was in fact poor and in debt, attacked m and asked d publican National Committee whether they thought he should resign.

His best remembered remarks were in reference to his wife and a dog named Checkers. "Pat and I have the satisfaction that every dime that we've got is honestly ours. I should say this - that Pat doesn't have a mink coat. But she does have a respectable Republican

Then he said a man in Texas had given the family a cocker spaniel, "black and white and

"And our little girl, Tricia, the 6-year-old, named it Checkers. And you know the kids love the dog, and I just want to say this right now, that regardless of what they do about it, we're going to keep it."
Public response was overwhelmingly favorable, and he remained on the ticket. There was also the "kitchen debate" with Nikita S. Khrushchev, while Mr. Nixon was on a trip to Moscow in 1959 to open an American exhibit at a fair. In the kitchen of a model home, the two men engaged in a folksy dialogue on the relative merits of the capitalist and Soviet sys-

They stood jowl to jowl, the Soviet leader occasionally jabbing Mr. Nixon's chest for emphasis. The outcome was inconclusive, but Mr. Nixon won acclaim at home for the forceful manner in which he defended the American

After the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket won again in 1956 by a wide margin, Mr. Nixon was successful in grooming himself for the 1960 presidential nomination, which he won on the first ballot. In an effort to appeal to the "East-ern establishment," he chose Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts as his running mate. The Democratic ticket was Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts and Senator Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas.

The campaign went badly from the beginning. For the first time in his career, Mr. Nixon was on the defensive, forced to defend the Eisenhower record and to his reputation as an unfair campaigner.

Still, Mr. Nixon campaigned as doggedly as ever, and the outcome was extraordinarily close. In the popular vote Mr. Kennedy led by 113,000 out of 68.8 million cast. It was Mr. Nixon's first defeat and the last he would accept graciously.
At 48, Mr. Nixon returned to California and

At 48, Mr. Nixon returned to California and to be within striking distance of victory.

On June 17, five men employed by the Committee to Re-elect the President were arrested in another tumultuous campaign, but the voters seemed to recognize what Mr. Nixon admitted in his memoirs: He did not really want to be governor, he wanted to be president.

The night of his defeat he was in a foul mood. He felt he had been abused by the press, and when pressed to make a statement, he marched into the press room and made an angry farewell-to-politics speech that included the line, "You won't have Nixon to kick around anymore, because, gentlemen, this is my last press conference."

Ever restless, he moved to New York as a senior partner in a Wall Street law firm.

But he spent little time as a lawyer. He worked at becoming president. The crushing defeat of its 1964 nominee, Barry Goldwater, left the Republican Party in a shambles. It was Mr. Nixon who moved in and did the drudgery of rebuilding a constituency.

He was "the new new Nixon," and on Jan.

, 1968, he formally announced his candidacy for the presidency. He rolled easily through the primaries, and won the nomination on the first ballot at the convention in Miami Beach. President Johnson withdrew as a candidate because of the opposition to the Vietnam War.

Senator Robert F. Kennedy was assassinated in Los Angeles in June. Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey was nominated by the Democrats. At 55, Mr. Nixon seemed to have matured and put the excesses of his youth behind him. His mastery of foreign affairs and the prospects that he would bring an era of reforms after years of hastily enacted "Great Society" programs appealed to many. Mr. Nixon won the popular vote by a narrow margin and got 301 electoral votes to 191 for Mr. Humphrey and 46 for Governor George C. Wallace of Alabama, on a third-party ticket.

Despite his promises in the campaign and as president to cut back on government spending, Mr. Nixon's record was otherwise. One reason was that he had a liberal, Democratic Congress. Another was that he did believe in many innovations for government aid, and in the 1970s there was a strong public demand for such

Most of Mr. Nixon's energies, however, were spent in foreign affairs. He tried to fulfill his pledge to end the Vietnam War, which had dragged on for four years, through what he privately called "the madman theory," and it did not work. Mr. Nixon sought to convey to North Vietnam a message that he was so obsessed by Communist aggression that he would do anything to force a settlement the United States could accept. In 1973, U.S. forces withdrew from Vietnam under terms many believed could have been obtained when Mr. Nixon was inaugurated in 1969. But Mr. Nixon strongly disagreed with that assessment. The "peace with honor," which included the return of American prisoners, was supposed to protect the independence of South Vietnam. Still, just more than two years later, North Vietnamese troops took over the country.

In February 1972, Mr. Nixon made a triumphant trip to China to establish relations with its government for the first time since the Communist takeover, followed in May by the first of three summit meetings with Leonid I. Brezhnev and other Soviet leaders.

Over all, the Nixon era was a period of relaxed tensions between the world's two greatest powers, and progress in commerce and cultural exchanges.

With the advantage of being in office, Mr. Nixon in the 1972 campaign was able to exceed his 1968 performance in controlling the image he wished to portray on television, of a strong, moderate president who could get things done. Voters at the center were so distrustful of Senator George McGovern and his leftist supporters that the South Dakota Democrat never seemed a burglary at the Democratic National Committee headquarters in the Watergate complex in Washington, and two others were arrested later. White House officials, including the president, dismissed the burglary as a stupid act by overzealous campaign workers, and the defen-dants themselves said that no one close to Mr. Nixon was involved.

The Democrats' efforts to turn the incident into a campaign issue had little effect, and Mr. Nixon's victory was overwhelming.

He had barely embarked on his second term.

however, when the Watergate scandals began to consume virtually all of his energies.

Judge John J. Sirica of Federal District Court threatened long jail terms for the defendants, and James W. McCord, convicted on burglary charges in January, responded by promising to tell all in return for leniency. He implicated John W. Dean 3d, the White House counsel, who also began to talk.

Mr. Dean's full story was disclosed in the summer in televised hearings before the select committee of the Senate that had been set up to investigate the matter. He told of White House involvement in Watergate from the day of the burglary onward

On July 16, Alexander P. Butterfield, a former aide, disclosed to the Senate committee that Mr. Nixon had secretly taped conversations in his Oval Office almost from the beginming of his presidency.

There began a long series of struggles by Congressional committees and prosecutors to obtain the pertinent tapes, with Mr. Nixon resisting on the theory that a dispute within the executive branch or a dispute between Congress and the president was not subject to the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and that the president's private counsels were protected in order to maintain the efficient operation of

As the dispute continued, a parallel but unrelated crisis came to a head: Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, a former governor of Maryland, was charged in July 1973 with taking money from contractors who solicited business with Mary-land; the prosecutors said the practice continued even when he was vice president.

On Oct. 10, Mr. Agnew agreed to resign and pleaded no contest to one count of income tax evasion. Two days later, Mr. Nixon named Representative Gerald R. Ford of Michigan as vice president.

His selection of the well-liked House minority leader was seen as a way to avoid another confrontation with Congress, which had to approve the choice. But as the charges unfolded,

Mr. Nixon seemed to lose much of his political indement. The "Saturday Night Massacre" of Oct. 20, 1973, was a case in point.

After Archibald Cox, the special Watergate prosecutor, refused to agree to a Nixon plan for access to the White House tapes, the president ordered Attorney General Elliot L. Richardson Mr. Richardson refused, and resigned. His deputy, William D. Ruckelshaus, also refused, and was dismissed. Finally, Solicitor General Robert H. Bork, as acting attorney general, dismissed Mr. Cox.

The action caused a major erosion of support for the president. Calls for his resignation

The president quickly relented on the subpoenaed tapes, after disclosing that two of the nine tapes were missing and a third had an unexplained 18½-minute "gap," and he announced that he would name a new special

Soon the new prosecutor, Leon Jaworski, wanted more tapes. The Senate Watergate committee wanted tapes. The House Judiciary Committee wanted tapes. The tapes and other evidence from the investigations eventually showed in great detail as-pects of the "dark side" of the Nixon presidency that had been concealed from public view, particularly Mr. Nixon's personal involvement in the cover-up. Not only did he propose paying hush money to the Watergate defendants to keep them from implicating the White House, he also ordered a halt to the investigation by the FBL. In late July, the House Judiciary Committee with millions of Americans watching, deliberated articles of impeachment. At the end of the month, with some Republicans joining the majority Democrats, the committee charged that in violation of his constitutional duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed," Richard Nixon had "prevented, obstructed and impeded the administration of justice." It seemed almost certain that the full House would impeach the president, and his chances of avoiding conviction by the Senate were beginning to seem little better.

Mr. Nixon's closest aides began an orchestrated effort to lead him to a decision that his only choice was to leave office voluntarily. On Aug. 7 he met with his family and aides and that night, following constitutional proce-dure, Mr. Nixon informed Mr. Kissinger that he had decided to step down. Mr. Ford was informed the next morning.

At 9 P.M. on Aug. 8, the president appeared on television and announced he would resign at noon the next day.

World leaders paid tribute over the weekend to Richard Nixon as a international statesman who achieved diplomatic triumphs from Moscow to Beijing.

In a warm statement Saturday, President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia said, "I am shocked by the death not only of an extraordinary man but also of one of the greatest politicians in the world. "I became convinced that he was one of the first major world politicians who have under-stood Russia, and understood what it was fighting for," Mr. Yeltsin said. In China, where Mr. Nixon's diplomacy led to the reopening of relations, leaders praised the former president for bringing both countries closer. In a telegram of condolence, President Jiang Zemin and Prime Minister Li Peng saluted Mr. Nixon as "a politician with stra-, tegic long-term vision and political courage-

Chinese television began its Saturday news programs with the report of Mr. Nixon's death. The New China News Agency described Mr. Nixon, who visited China five times after his historic February 1972 trip, as "an old friend of the Chinese people."

• Prime Minister John Major praised Mr. Nixon "for his tireless work for a better understanding between East and West." • Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Mr.

In other reaction from around the world:

Nixon had defied the world by supporting Israel in the 1973 Middle East war. "Israel lost a friend. I personally lost a personal friend," Mr. Rabin said.

 Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa praised Mr. Nixon's efforts to improve post-World War II relations, particularly the 1972 return of its southernmost island, Okinawa. Vietnam's Foreign Ministry had only a one-sentence reaction to Mr. Nixon's death: "May he rest in peace."

Nixon: A Political Odyssey

Watergate Will Remain

If not the dominant politician of his time, he was surely the most durable. It thus came as something of a mild surprise, when he died Friday at the age of 81, that Richard Nixon had somehow failed to survive time itself.

It is, of course, the multiple offenses associated with Watergate for which Mr. Nixon is immediately remembered: the "dirty tricks" campaign, the conviction of so many of his associates for perjury and obstruction of jus-tice and, finally, his own resignation to avoid an almost certain impeachment proceeding. This betrayal of the public trust remains the granite flaw that forever bars Mr. Nixon from the pantheon of great presidents.

Yet he endured after that disgrace, just as he had survived President Dwight Eisenhower's doubts about his fitness to be vice president, a narrow loss of the presidency to John Kennedy in 1960 and a humiliating defeat in his try for the California governorship in 1962. By sheer will he clawed his way back to a semblance of respectability, turning himself into an elder statesman and an adviser to presidents.

Throughout this cycle of victory, defeat, disgrace and resurrection he provided Americans with a lodestar for their political beliefs: they admired or detested him, but there was very little neutral ground. Future historians will find it hard to ignore a man who so transfixed his contemporaries. But what to make of him now?

With one or two exceptions, contemporary chroniclers agree that Mr. Nixon was at his best on the international stage. Foreign policy was unquestionably his first love and there were notable triumphs, most famously the opening to China and the first strategic arms agreement with Moscow. But the SALT-1 treaty was not without serious flaws, and his tortured exit from Vietnam remains hugely controversial; history may give him and his chief strategist, Henry Kissinger, a more mod-est grade than they have awarded themselves.

Conversely, most students have tended to underrate his domestic achievements. As Tom Wicker observes in his book on Mr. Nixon, "One of Us," the 37th president was hardly a visionary or crusader. He was, instead, a shrewd pragmatist with exceptional antennae and the ability to turn public discontents to

From Shame to Stature

Only weeks after Mr. Nixon resigned the presidency in 1974, he became very ill and was believed to be at the edge of death. For an organization such as The Washington Post, which had played a part in pursuing, reporting and editorially denouncing the activities that eventually forced him out of office, and which had incurred both his wrath and his various attempts at retaliation, it was daunting to try to figure out how we could now sit down and write an obituary appreciation of his career. But Mr. Nixon was spared - and so, in an exceedingly minor spin-off of his good fortune, were large segments of the American press he so detested, who did not know how to bid a civil farewell to a man they had so recently and for so long been fighting with and who were writhing in discomfort at the prospect of having to do so.

The 20 years that have gone by since then have certainly not narrowed, let alone obliterated, the unbridgeable gap between those of us who believed —and continue to —that the Watergate offenses for which Mr. Nixon was punished were sinister and dangerous, and those who believed - and still do - that he was unjustly hounded from office.

But those 20 years have afforded a little merciful distance and detachment and made it easier for the late president's antagonists to see his career in a longer perspective. Bill Clinton, who fancies himself the "Comeback Kid" and who has shown an undeniable gift for resilience, is as nothing in this respect to Mr. Nixon, who throughout his life showed an incredible capacity to pick up and start over. It was in fact an abiding worry and joke among Democrats from the days of his earliest political setbacks that Mr. Nixon - seemingly rejected once and for all - would be back; and astonishingly, he always was.

This took guts. A man whose actions and remarks over a lifetime in politics had revealed, even for a politician, an unusually anxious, uncertain, engulfing concern with his reputation, his image, his accordance of respect by his contemporaries and by history, was always willing to risk further ridicule and humiliation in his efforts to start over and gain back lost ground. This he would do in the aftermath of political disasters that would have caused almost anyone else to give up and go home. The audacity this reflected turned up in his particular achievements in office, as well as in some of the domestic initiatives he supported at least for a time but did not complete. The opening of the U.S. government to China after decades of nonrecognition and in the face of great political hostility on the part of the public (which earlier Mr. Nixon had done much to feed) is always cited as Exhibit A in this regard.

But often as not the recital ends at that point, and there is no Exhibit B. This is wrong. We would add the near-equal achievement of opening up the U.S. government to much expanded diplomatic dealings with the Arab states of the As an ex-president, he was a patriot who Middle East. It is often forgotten that until the shared his wisdom with his successors. Perlate Nixon years, relations between America and all of those states were hostile.

political advantage. The results were sometimes contradictory. Mr. Nixon's "Southern strategy" in 1968 and his appeals to a restless white middle class in 1972 helped popularize racial appeals as a national campaign tactic. At the same time, seeing little choice, he ordered the Justice Department to continue dismantling the dual school system in the South.

Though he was no more an activist on the environment than he was on civil rights, Mr. Nixon correctly sensed a growing public appetite for a cleaner America and made that concern the centerpiece of his 1970 State of the Union address, months before the first Earth Day. His support made it easier for Congress to pass two seminal pieces of legislation, the Clean Air Act of 1970 and the Clean Water Act of 1972. Mr. Nixon also sought to reshape the nation's welfare system in much the same manner Bill Clinton proposes today; with a little more effort and a lot more help in the Senate, he might have done so.

But policy issues do not account for our fascination with a man who combined insecurity and ambition in explosive measure and was equally capable of unexpected kindnesses and staggering vindictiveness. Nor do issues of policy or ideology explain why, at the height of his powers and facing a weak opponent in George McGovern, he encouraged a pattern of illegal behavior that ultimately de-

A provisional answer may be found in a phrase Mr. Nixon often applied to himself: "At bottom, I am a political man." He used these words proudly, as if to mock the intellec-tuals and moralists he despised, but in the end they might well serve as an epitaph. For if they were meant to suggest a talent for maximizing political opportunities, they also implied the absence of any guiding moral compass besides a burning dedication to political survival.

Mr. Nixon would have found such an assessment too narrow, but any fair reading of the record suggests that Watergate was only the endgame of a career in which he lavished as much energy on neutralizing or destroying his opponents as on cultivating allies. Add to that a perfect memory for real and imagined insults, and it is possible to see why he sanc-tioned the activities that brought him down.

— THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Mr. Nixon also engaged boldly with the Soviet Union and undertook to carry his party alone as with his China initiative on journeys it did not much care to make (although none of this sped or smoothed his ability to achieve the end he sought in Vietnam).

Similarly, there were in Mr. Nixon's presidency at least dalliances, and sometimes more, with a variety of domestic reforms on welfare, on medical care and on the environment, among others, that were bold for the time; some of them look even better now in the light of subsequent right-wing reaction and left-wing mousiness in government.
In his presidential years, despite some people and some policies that pointed the other way, Mr. Nixon ended up playing a raw game of racial politics, not unlike the McCarthyite indulgences that marked his earlier career. And for all his 1968 campaign pledge to "bring us together," he was too often and too readily given to "enemies list" type politics, a weakness for which he eventually paid a higher price than the objects of his animus did.

But that was not the sum total of the man or his handiwork. Along with the dark side and the resentfulness, Mr. Nixon had a large and maginative concept of the American presidency and what it could accomplish, a concept that not all of his successors have shared. He was willing to think big and take big risks on some notable occasions. To the immense annoyance of those of us who spent so much time locked in combat with him, Mr. Nixon always liked to say that he was "not a quitter." The extraordinary, redemptive journey he undertook from shame to stature in the last two decades of his life proved that he was surely right about that. —THE WASHINGTON POST.

Perhaps History Will Abide

While Watergate will not be forgotten, Mr. Nixon's skill in managing what could have become the life-and-death struggle of the Cold War is valued by many historians. Mr. Nixon was more progressive than his Republican successors on civil rights issues. The Clinton welfare reform proposal contains elements of Mr. Nixon's family assistance plan, which was torpedoed by conservatives.

I never admired Mr. Nixon. I thought it hypocritical of him to denounce Harry Truman for using rough language that was similar to Mr. Nixon's own private talk. I was appalled by Mr. Nixon's destructive, Red-baitng campaigns. I wanted him to end the war in Vietnam. I wanted him to acknowledge that Watergate was wrong. But I share the sadness of his admirers. He was a shy, complicated man who fought his way to the top from unlikely beginnings. As president, he was a visionary diplomat who made the world safer. As an ex-president, he was a patriot who haps history will be kind to him, after all.

The Melancholic Toll Of Ambition's Fervor

By George F. Will memo containing an exact quote

WASHINGTON - No matter what its combination of triumphs and tragedies, any life defined primarily by tenacity must seem, at the end, a story of some bravery but even more melancholy. In Richard Nixon's long slog through various valleys of humiliation, to political triumph and disgrace and partial rehabilitation, there were many episodes of glory, but a constant grimness. His political life turned on five close calls. In 1948, he had the right hunch about Alger Hiss. Watching the Washington establishment rally around Mr. Hiss, Mr. Nixon honed his cynicism and stoked his resentments.

In 1952, his place on the ticket with Dwight Eisenhower jeopardized by financial dealings of a sort not uncommon at the time, Mr. Nixon, steadily more cynical, saved himself with the "Checkers" speech before the largest television audience in history to that time. In 1960, he lost the presidency by a thin margin and perhaps by fraud. In 1968, 18 years after he had last won an election on his own, he won a 43 percent victory.

And if in 1973 his lawyers had not

As Elder Statesman, Remember Him Kindly

WASHINGTON — In the last two decades of his long and turbulent life, Richard Nixon worked hard at becoming the global elder statesman of his time despite the disgrace of Watergate. He had succeeded in that final grand endeavor at the hour of his death Friday night.

For America's 37th president, foreign policy was ssion in office, solace and salvation in defeat. Mr. Nixon's active engagement abroad and his generally well crafted foreign affairs books and speeches could not erase the stain of his involvement in the nation's most notorious obstruction of justice case. Nor was Mr. Nixon naive enough to think they would - that he could "rehabilitate" himself in U.S. politics by elder statesmanship, an intention frequently imputed to him by critics.

His endeavor was different, I concluded as I listened to him give several major talks on foreign affairs and read his books in recent years. Mr. Nixon set out not to recall his foreign policy accomplishments, but to enhance them with the nonpartisan, constructive unofficial diplomacy he pursued after resigning the presidency.

As a result, his foreign policy accomplishments are likely to loom larger in history than they otherwise would. His policy failures in Vietnam and in securing a lasting detente with Moscow shrink, while his successes in China and the Middle East take on an extra glow in light of his campaign to be The Foreign Policy President of this century. In contrast to his overly enthusiastic embrace of Leonid Brezhnev, it is hard to fault Mr. Nixon's clear-eyed appraisal of the decisive events and per-sonalities of the final years of the Soviet Union and the opening phase of the Russian Federation. He

I heard him summarize those views three weeks ago in Washington in what turned out to be his final extensive foreign policy presentation. For 90 minutes, the 81-year-old Nixon stood before a group of 30 of us and without any notes delivered a compelling, persuasive analysis of Mr. Yeltsin's current predicament, Japan's future, Eastern Europe's security preoccupations and other foreign policy topics.

The Nixon shrewdness so apparent in his dealings with world leaders — and so absent in his dealing with the crimes of Watergate — glimmered particularly through his remarks about the Russian extremist politician, Vladimir Zhirinovsky. Mr. Nixon portrayed the Russian as an overreaching opportunist ready to say anything to win votes.

Mr. Zhirinovsky's anti-Jewish ravings were in large part electoral calculation. Mr. Nixon said. What seemed far more real and heartfelt were the extreme anti-Muslim sentiments Mr. Zhirinovsky voiced in their meeting but which he has not emphasized in public. The Zhirinovsky phenomenon probably reached its highwater mark in December's elections in Russia, Mr. Nixon believed. Mr. Zhirinovsky benefited from the vacuum left by the jailing in October of Alexander Rutskoi and other Yeltsin opponents. Their release after the election means there is a conservative anti-Yeltsin alternative that is also anti-Zhirinovsky. Mr. Nixon particularly emphasized to his audience America's need to take into account Russia's recent humiliation and determination to regain its dignity. Respecting Russian dignity was in fact the key to efforts to crafting a stable new U.S.-Russian relationship, he indicated.

Losing and regaining dignity was a subject Mr.

Nixon knew a lot about and recognized easily in the case of others. He had no chance to recover his dignity through domestic politics after Watergate. It was only operating on the world stage as a private citizen that he could do that, as he had after his defeat by John Kennedy in 1960. Mr. Nixon's final remark to his Washington audience was simultaneously puzzling and revealing. As he sat down, he recalled "that it is exactly 47 years since John F. Kennedy and I arrived in Washington to serve in Congress together," at a crucial moment in defining America's role after victory in World War II.

Why recall Mr. Kennedy before this group? An aswer offered by others there who knew Mr. Nixon far better than I: The former president wanted to emphasize that he and Mr. Kennedy, while political rivals, shared a common view of America's role in the Cold War world and of the need for active, gaged American leadership in foreign affairs. his current successor and his countrymen that, despite the end of the Cold War, the need for American leadership in foreign affairs remains clear and constant. History, which must judge him harshly in many other ways, will remember him kindly for that.

A man with a gnawing sense of his inferior education, he nevertheless brought into his admin-istration two Harvard professors as foreign policy and domestic policy advisers — Henry Kissinger and Daniel Patrick Moynihan - and he also enlisted the services of other extraordinarily talented intellectuals, including George Shultz, James Schlesinger and Arthur Burns.

If one takes as a simple but serviceable measure of modern liberalism's program the expansion of the central government's role as society's supervisor, Mr. Nixon's administration was more liberal than any, other than Lyndon Johnson's, since World War II. In the Nixon years, the federal government created the Environmen-tal Protection Agency and the Occu-pational Safety and Health Administration; it began racial quotas and set-asides; Mr. Nixon favored an enormous "industrial policy" project, the federal funding of the supersonic passenger aircraft; he proposed a guaranteed annual income; he insti-tuted wage and price controls, the most sweeping intrusion of the state into society since the New Deal; he was smitten by John Connally, a Tory Democrat with a zest for govment domination of markets.

Mr. Nixon's largest achievement was the opening to China. But as the architect of detente he probably pro-longed the life of the Soviet Union. And although he fancied himself at daggers drawn with the nation's intellectual clites, he joined the foreign policy elite in making a fetish of arms control with the Soviet Union. That project was impossible until it was unimportant: impossible because of the Soviet Union's hegemonic aims, then unimportant because the Soviet Union was imploding.

Mr. Nixon was spectacularly illsuited by temperament to become president in the late 1960s, a moment of extreme cultural fragmentation. Traditional political preoccupations with economic redistributions were being supplanted by anxiety about the disintegration of the cultural unity of the postwar period. Lacking an articulable defense of the cultural values under siege, he became a vessel of smoldering animosities.

in the House of Representatives, where his ascent to national promi nence began with his confrontation of Mr. Hiss, his career was closed by the Judiciary Committee's impeach ment hearings. His remaining 20 years were spent using his reputation for statecraft to regain some of the public's respect, and even the affection that often accrues to the tenacious.

Until his forced retirement from active politics, the acids of resentments had ulcerated his personality until self-pity was its strongest fac-ulty. Politics is mostly talk, a lot of it small talk with strangers, at which Mr. Nixon was never comfortable. Rarely, and never contentedly, employed other than at politics, he measured out his life in forksful of chicken à la king with contributors and county chairmen. That is not good for the soul.

In his nationally televised farewell to his staff in the East Room on Aug. 9, 1974, he read Theodore Roosevelt's words about the death of his wife: "And when my heart's dearest died, the light went from my life forever." That equation of the loss of political office to the death of a loved one was terrifying testimony to the toll ambition can take on character, Washington Post Writers Group.

What Price America's Moral Failure in Bosnia? Disillusion at Home

The New York Times.

By Peter Maass azde, Zepa, Srebrenica, Sarajevo, Tuzla and Bihac, Help has been slow.

BUDAPEST — When American politicians and generals discuss Bosnia, they often have Vietnam on their minds. Their warnings about quagmires, mission creep and the shortcomings of air strikes relate to Vietnam and the lessons that should have been learned from it. But they are ignoring the most relevant lesson: A government that is deceptive and acts immorally will undermine its credibility with the governed, particularly the younger generation.

Every generation has its water-sheds. For George Bush's generation, it was World War II and the Cold War. For Bill Clinton's, it was Victnam and Watergate. I am 33 years old, which nestles me amid Generation X and the yuppies, and for us Bosnia is turning into a watershed of disillusion. President Clinton, by opening himself up to justified criticism about hypocrisy and appearement, is deepening the apathy of younger Americans who want a government they can respect and believe in.

It might be true that most members of my generation could not find Bosnia on a map, let alone Gorazde. But you do not need to understand Balkan politics to realize that the U.S. government has failed to accomplish the bare minimum, which is to do what it says it will do on an issue that it has defined as one of good versus evil.

The goal of rolling back the Serbs was long ago abandoned, but at least, we were assured last year, America and its allies at the United Nations would protect six "safe areas" - Gortions include high unemployment, gruesome crime, race riots and urban

The sad story of Bosnia's demise, presided over by America and its al-lies, is not new. The imminent fall of Gorazde is just another nail in its coffin, hammered into place by the Serbs and observed by the rest of the world. But because Gorazde's fall has received spectacular media coverage, and in the obvious disarray of Mr. Clinton's laughable policy for containing the Serbs, Americans are getting a subversive, if perhaps accurate, message on the evening news: Their government is incompetent and immoral.

Disillusion is not new to my genera-tion. We have had Watergate, Oliver North and the Iran-contra affair, some bad times in the job market and, more recently. Whitewater. But even during my hypercritical days a decade ago as editorial page editor of the student newspaper at the University of California at Berkeley, I thought the govemment could do good things.

But now Bosnia. The foreign policy experts talk about America's loss of credibility on the global stage. I worry about something more intimate, about the loss of credibility between America's government and its governed. An important bond is being frayed. This increases my worries about the future of my country.

My hometown, Los Angeles, has endured sufferings in the past year that are almost biblical — fire, floods, earthquake. Its nonbiblical tribula-lecay. Is America in a tailspin? I don't know. Nobody does. But we all know. that it needs to get moving again. That cannot happen unless people have hope, and unless they have a government that they trust.

I am living overseas, so it might seem unwarranted for me to talk about "my" generation. But I visit America often enough to stay in touch. Thanks to the wonders of satel-lite television, I watch American network news before going to sleep - I probably see it more often than my peers in the United States. I am also part of the cyber crowd, so every day I log on to CompuServe and browse through the Global Crises bulletin board, a computer talking shop for such world issues as Bosnia.

When people post messages on the Global Crises bulletin board, they have undramatic headlines such as "Serb Attack on Gorazde." The messages are often interesting and provocative. During the past few days I noticed that new people, not the "regulars," were posting messages. Gor-azde has touched them. There was an musual headline on a long message posted by a newcomer who couldn't believe America was standing on the sidelines. The headline was simple; "Pain So Deep in the Soul."

The failure to protect Gorazde crystallizes and deepens the Ameri-can government's failure in the past two years (a failure that was nursed into life by a Republican administration). President Clinton could have stood up to the Serbian attack on Gorazde long ago and, in a small way, refired our trust in government to do the right thing, or at least try to. He managed to regain a bit or credibility by staring down the Serbs over Sarajevo earlier this year. But with Gorazde, he fell flat. The disillusion grew with each Serbian shell that hit Gorazde's hospital.

1894: Uniontown Strife

NEW YORK - A serious disturbance is reported from Uniontown, Pa. A coke-worker on strike having been arrested, a body of lifty women went to the police-station and de-manded for his release. This being refused, the women fiercely attacked the sheriff's posse, who were com-pelled to use their weapons. A number of women were felled with clubs or beaten with rifle stocks, others received bayonet wounds. The situation in the town is described as alarming. 1919: Italy and the Slavs

PARIS - Sem Benelli, the Italian poet and dramatist, has written for the Herald the following comments on President Wilson's manifesto for Italy: President Wilson evidently considers our people as on the plane of an African colony, dominated by the will of a few ambitious men; and with the greatest ignorance of our history, he does not seem to know even that this war was waged by the whole Italian people against those enemies whom Mr. Wilson now shields and protects with all his affection and strength against us. Those enemies, yesterday, were called Austrians. To-day, the Austro-Hungarian Empire having disappeared, they call themselves Yugo-Slavs — that is, Southern Slavs. But they do not cease by that fact to be less Slav and, therefore, less enemies of Roman and Italian civilization, which the Slavs for centuries have worked to destroy.

Bond Investors Are Blind To All News but Bad News

By Carl Gewirtz

nal Herald Tribune ARIS - European bank analysts are reassessing the depth ARIS — European bank analysts are reassessing the dependence of the gloom pervading bond markets and concluding that there will be no quick escape from the fear that is eroding prices. The extent of the pessimism was exposed when bond prices across Europe slumped after the Bundesbank cut its money-market interest rate by one-eighth percentage point after the previous week's quarter-point cut in its floor and ceiling rates. What normally would have been good news for bond markets was transformed into a disaster last week as investors used the seemingly good news as a chance to unload. "There are lots of people who have been badly burned this year and are ready to use any opportunity to sell what they still own," a U.S. banker said. Investors 'are ready "It looks to us as if investors who fundamentally believe Euto use any opportunity ropean bond prices will rise are being forced to get out because to sell.' they have reached pain thresholds and cannot afford to keep holding paper in a market that continually goes against them," a Swiss banker commented. Adding discomfort is the increased volatility. Although volume in cash markets is everywhere reported to be relatively modest, activity in futures markets is robust with daily price movements in the benchmark Deutsche mark market now averaging half a point, nearly double what the market was accustomed to.

This situation is directly linked to the reassessment under way of growth prospects in Germany and the impact faster-than-expected growth will have on short-term interest rates.

News that Economy Minister Gunter Rexrodt expects growth this year possibly exceeding 1.5 percent, up from the earlier forecast of 1 percent, was not welcomed; the futures market now prices the low in short-term German rates at 5 percent in September. (The finance minister. Theo Waigel, made a similar comment over the weekend.) By end-year, three-month money is priced at 5.17 percent. The current rate is 5.44 percent.

"It's a super-sensitive environment," one analyst observed. "There's a heightened sensitivity to what faster growth will mean for bond yields following the dreadful first-quarter experience of the United States and Britain."

Joanne Perez at Banque Indosuez in Paris noted: "Pessimism over the longer-term evolution of interest rates provides a major obstacle to a sustained recovery in European bond markets." New-issue activity remains subdued: the daring few who approach the market are mostly confined to short-dated paper of five years. Germany's Landeskreditbank Baden-Württemburg, or L-Bank tapped the market for 2 billion DM with five-year notes in a global offering, the second ever in this market. The global formula allowed a larger-than-normal size, assuring trading liquidity that is especially prized these days. "Buy-and-hold investors are just not there." one manager commented, "so liquidity is at a premium."

International Herald Tribune, Monday, April 25, 1994

The reins have been passed this year from father to son at Kohlberg & Co., the leveraged buyout firm founded by Jerome Kohlberg, who also was one of the founders of Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co. James Kohlberg, 36, is now managing partner of the firm, which is based in Mount Kisco, New York, while Jerome, 68, continue full-time as senior partner. James Kohlberg shared his views on the buyout business with Susan Antilla of The New York

Q. What do you make of all the hype about the yet-to-be-seen information highway? A. There's no question there was a lot of hype. And more than hype, people were paying for revenues that were in someone's imagination — it's still a fantasy. As a businessman, I don't know how you value that - how you pay for that. When you look at the people who have made massive fortunes in different industries, from Sam Walton to Bill Gates, none of them started out with this grand vision of what the world would be like in 15 years.

Q. You mean they found something people needed right away. Like pots and pans? A. Pots and pans. Or a software program that would run a computer. I don't mean to suggest that those men don't have vision, because vision is an important part of being successful. But so are pots and pans and the people who need them now.

Q. So you are running the firm now? A. Yes. I have the title of managing partner, but it really is run as a team. Q. How have your investors done?

A. We took four public in 1993 (ABT Co., ABC Rail Products, Northwestern Steel & Wire and Welbilt Corp.) and did one second-ary offering. We sold a fifth one — Crossland Mortgage. Crossland was one of our quickest exits. We bought it for $80 million in December 1992 and are closing the sale in two weeks at $132 million.

Q. How do you pick companies? A. When we first started, we had the traditional criteria that all the investment companies talk about: stable companies with stable cash flow, good historical cash generation, lots of assets. But over time, what we've added to that is the ability to invest in more troubled situations - companies whose bal-

China Expects 17% Inflation, Missing Target

BEIJING — An economist working for China's cabinet has forecast that nationwide inflation will hit 17 percent this year, missing the government's 10 percent target. In an article Saturday in the offi-cial China Daily, Ma Jiantang, an economist in the State Council's Development and Research Center, also predicted that prices in 35 large and medium-sized Chinese cities would jump by an average of 22 percent this year.

Earlier this month, a State Statistical Bureau report estimated that China's economy would grow this year by 11.5 percent, well above the 9 percent target set by Prime Minister Li Peng in March

The combination of high growth and high inflation threatens to undermine China's economic reforms. Mr. Ma said in the article.

"Checking further price hikes and maintaining price stability is vital to the success of China's reform and economic development this year," he said.

In a related development, the People's Daily, another official or-gan, reported Saturday that the State Council would ban futures trading in steel, coal and sugar to prevent speculation on these commodities from fueling inflation.

A State Council notice forbids all futures contracts in sugar and steel with a delivery date after Oct. It calls for a similar ban on coal

China's economy last year grew 13.4 percent, and nationwide inflation ran at 13 percent for the year. In the first three months of 1994, that rate shot up to an annual rate

24.5 percent in major cities. The government responded to the increase by capping prices of basic goods out of concern that inflation could fuel social unrest. Mr. Ma endorsed that policy, say-ing the government should delay plans to lift price controls for crude oil, electricity, freight transportation and housing rents. China had planned to allow companies to raise the price of these products this year in an attempt to attract domestic and foreign investment to these industries and alleviate shortages.

The China Daily Business Weekly said Sunday that Beijing was considering allowing foreign investment in the manufacture of large electrical generators.

Westinghouse Electric Corp. and Siemens AG are reportedly eager to take up the challenge. Many of China's existing generators are imported, but at great expense, and officials quoted in the report said boosting domestic gen-erator production through foreign investment was the only way out of the supply crisis.

Separately, the China Daily reported Saturday that labor unions would enjoy expanded rights in state enterprises under new official guidelines

An All China Federation of Trade Union document defining the role of unions under a "modern enterprise system" stipulates that they are to be empowered with rights involving labor contracts and to be given representation on the board.

The document is to be submitted to the State Council. (Bloomberg, AFP)

The Dollar

By Carl Gewirtz International Flerald Tribune

PARIS - It was the dream scenario that the foreign-exchange market was supposed to be waiting for. A cut of one-eighth percentage point in German money-market ates, following the previous week's quarter-point decline in floor and ceiling rates, and a quarter-point increase in U.S. rates.

This was the material to get the dollar started on its long-expected cyclical rise against the Deutsche Dealers certainly thought so. But when they realized they were the only ones in the market they retreated - and so did the dollar. It ended last week trading at 1.6882 DM, below the previous week's closing level of 1.7145 DM.

"It's all been fully anticipated," one disgruntled trader explained. "The market has been so focused on the dollar's potential upside, everyone is so bullish, that there's no momentum behind any upward movement," said Michael Burckhardt at Hessische Landesbank in Frankfurt

The major disappointment, observers said, stems from the relatiming of both the U.S. rate increases and the German reductions. But analysts also cited a number of other factors to account for the market's disillusion with the dollar. These include:

• An upward revision in likely growth this year in Germany, raising questions about how low interest rates will fall.

• Concern about the widening U.S. current-account deficit, which is expected to add some $200 billion this year to the stock of dollars held outside the United States.

• Dollar sales by European and Asian central banks unrelated to See DOLLAR, Page 11

World Bank Backs Asia on Trade reply to countries such as the Unit-

By Alan Friedman International Herald Tribune

PARIS - A strongly worded call for Europe to "embrace, not fear" expanded trade with the prosperous emerging economies of East Asia is to be issued in Brussels on Monday by Gautam S. Kaji, a World Bank vice president in charge of the region.

In the speech, an advance copy of which was obtained by the International Herald Tribune, Mr. Kaji contended that Europe's fear of losing jobs and competitiveness to low-wage manufacturers in countries such as Singapore and Malaysia was "misplaced." The World Bank official, putting his finger on one of the most politically sensitive issues in world trade, said that enhancing trade ties with the region offered "the best longterm prospects for job growth and economic security in Europe." He said Europe could not legislate its economic security and should accept that the low-wage nations of East Asia would eventually offer new export markets and opportunities for investment in public works and environmental technology. Mr. Kaji rejected what he described as the European Union's "feeling that the developing countries of East Asia have an unfair advantage, that they are not playing by the rules." He said it was "anxiety" about competition from East Asia that inspired recent heated discussions among members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade about linking trade rules to wages and working conditions.

mestic product, compared with 29 percent in Poland and up to 22 percent in Hungary according to figures compiled in the 1993 Annual Economic Review of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. With so much ground to make up, Czechoslovakia's private sector catapulted into hyper-growth after 1989, swelling 40 percent a year, a rate four times the average for other private sectors in the region.

"A conspicuously large share" of foreign investment in Eastern Europe appears to have gone into the service sector, particularly tourism, because of low start-up costs and the prevalence of demands unfilled by state monopolies, the EBRD noted. Indeed, 31-year-old Scott Otto, owner of Sport Bar Praha, said he often serves people like himself, young entrepreneurs who have come to Prague to try to provide "services that people here need, but don't know that they need."

"A lot of young Americans come in, have a beer, and we compare notes," he said. One guy imports athletic gear, another brings in bicycles, a couple of guys from San Francisco are trying to start a businessservices center." Others have started an ployment agency, a pure water vendor, and a software company

In October 1991, Mr. Otto quit his job in New York as a corporate finance consultant at Ernst & Young to move to Prague. He spent three months learning Czech, then started looking for business opportunities. He considered opening a tennis resort. Instead, Mr. Otto built his sports bar, modeled on an establishment near his apartment in New York. He raised $200,000 to renovate a space that now contains four televisions, two pool tables, a basketball machine, a dart board, two bars, 20 tables and an athletic clothing store.

Another entrepreneur, Glenn Spicker, came to Prague in the summer of 1992 with a van, a couple of bikes, a computer and a lot of ideas." Behind him lay an unfinished grad school paper on privatiza-tion in Czechoslovakia, ahead of him, a 15year lease on 200 square meters (2,150 square feet) of prime real estate just off the city's central square. Now 15 Czechs work for the 28-year-old American, serving New Orleans-style food at Red Hot & Blues, his 60-seat establish-ment. Waitresses pull down nearly as much in a week as Czech doctors earn monthly. Mr. Spicker said. He and his partner are still learning the tricks of their trade, and they only recently realized that a cash register can help clock customer traffic.

The Globe's owners, mostly former journalists, are also learning about business. They called on friends with business degrees for help writing their business plan. The group miscalculated badly, Ms. Griffin said, projecting sales of two books an hour. In fact, 1,000 books were sold on opening day and sales have since settled at about 20

While the Globe depends on its nonnative patrons, at Sport Bar Praha, which opened last August, half the patrons on an average night are Czechs. Before the bar opened, Czech friends warned Mr. Otto, people here don't go to a bar to watch sports. They didn't realize that was because there was no place to go."

WASHINGTON — American machine tool orders rose 25.8 percent in March from February, bolstered by the strong U.S. economy, the Association of Manufacturing Technology said

At G-7, U.S. Presses for Growth

WASHINGTON - The United States pressed Japan and Germany to do more to stimulate their domestic economies as finance officials from the world's seven richest industrial countries conferred Sunday on the threat to global growth posed by rising interest rates.

Finance officials and central bank presidents of the Group of Seven - the United States, Japan, Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada met behind closed doors at Dumbarton House in Washington's Georgetown district.

The G-7 talks were being held in advance of the annual spring meetings of the 178-nation Interna-tional Monetary Fund and its sister lending agency, the World Bank. While IMF economists are forecasting that the global economy in 1994 should turn in its best performance in five years, that is due primarily to unexpectedly strong growth in the United States. The IMF has actually revised downward its expectations for growth in Japan and Germany.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said in advance of the talks that Germany should cut interest rates and Japan needs to do more to stimulate domestic demand to improve the global economy's growth prospects.

Mr. Bentsen was particularly pointed in his comments about Japan. The administration has been pressuring Japan to make a tax cut permanent and take other measures to boost domestic demand as a way of reducing America's record $60 billion trade delicit with that country.

Finance officials from other countries are concerned about the recent jump in long-term interest rates in the United States that was triggered by credit tightening on the part of the Federal Reserve

U.S. officials have insisted that financial markets have overreacted to the Fed's small tightening

In advance of the group meeting, Mr. Bentsen held a series of one-on-one talks Sunday morning with officials from Russia, Japan and Germany.

A Treasury official, speaking on condition that his name not be used, told reporters that Mr. Bentsen had a "useful discussion" with Finance Minister Hirohisa Fujii of Japan in which Mr. Bentsen had pressed the Japanese to go further with government stimulus measures.

Mr. Fujii told reporters that he had stressed to Bentsen the significance of the stimulus measures already taken by Japan.

DOLLAR: Circumstances Conspire Against Currency

Central banks "have been strong sellers over the past eight or nine days," noted Rainer Marian at Crédit Suisse in Zurich.

The selling has not been speciacular, Mr. Burckhardt observed. But a couple of million, constantiy," he added, has become a weight on the market.

Traders offer a multitude of explanations for the sales. Some say the banks are selling on behalf of the Malaysian central bank, which is supposedly still unwinding losing positions built up by its former management. Others suspect there is a rebalancing going on in Europe aimed at reducing holdings of dollars in favor of marks.

Whatever the motivation, dealers agree that such selling in a market already lacking conviction has areatly diminished volatility. That outcome alone could justify the central-bank actions, as officials nave greater control in markets where price movements are relatively small. "To hold dollar assets means you have to expect the dollar to appreciate." And at current levels the dollar does not appear to offer that perspective, he said.

"The dollar is not so undervalued as is popularly assumed," he said. He noted that estimated measures of the dollar's purchasing power parity of around 1.90 DM "vastly overstate where the dollar should be." In his view, that parity is somewhere around 1.75 DM and given the increased risk premium on the dollar "it's logical that the dollar should trade at some discount."

Jim O'Neill at Swiss Bank Corp. in London further argues that the upward revisions in expected German growth this year mean that "there is a basic reassessment about Germany under way. the Frankfurt district prosecutor's office, which is now investigating the Schneiders for fraud, said it was disturbed by Deutsche Bank's access to privileged information and that it would begin searching the bank's files on Monday.

Despite exposure totaling 1.2 biltion DM to the Schneider group, a loose alliance of companies owned by Mr. Schneider and his wife, Deutsche Bank has taken pains to distance itself from its debtor. "Deutsche Bank is not the financier of the Schneider group," it said in a statement on April 13, one day before it filed suit against the Schneiders for fraud.

Mr. Hartmann said Mr. Kopper had never met the developer. "Mr. Schneider didn't come and go in every board member's office," Mr. Harimann said.

But Mr. Schneider himself, in his letter to Mr. Weiss, wrote about a close relationship: "Deutsche Bank, along with its mortgage banking subsidiaries, has the biggest share of our total bank borrowing, and is also involved in the to confirm the sum in question.

Two newspapers, the Wiesba-dener Kutier and the Darmstädter Echo, said Saturday that a retired chief of a regional German bank had filed a legal complaint against Deutsche Bank with the Frankfurt state prosecutor, according to a Reuters dispatch from Frankfurt.

Fritz H. Haase reportedly alleged that Deutsche Bank "failed to meet the minimum requirements" for checking and dispensing loans to the Schneider group. Spokesmen for Deutsche Bank and the Frankfurt prosecutor's office had no im-mediate confirmation of the suit.

The Case of the Misbehaving Yield Curve

By Floyd Norris

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — A funny thing happened when the Federal Reserve Board set out to raise interest rates this year. The ones they wanted to raise went up only grudgingly. But others zoomed skyward.

Call it the case of the misbehaving yield curve. Short-term rates have moved less than the Fed seemed to have wanted, while longterm rates rose more. Moreover, rates on corporate and municipal bonds have risen more than those on Treasuries.

None of this is what was forecast, either by the Fed or by most private economists. The logic was that with inflation obviously not a big threat, a Fed tightening would reassure investors and long bond rates would not go up nearly as much as short rates.

In fact, the rise in short rates has been almost grudging. The Fed has pushed up the federal funds rate - the rate banks charge the Fed started tightening. At the other end of

Kidder Says

By Steve Lohr New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Kidder, Peabody & Co. has said that it discharged a second trader for concealing losses, a sign that broader problems were emerging at the securities firm.

How Bayer conserves resources by recycling:

There was a time when the importance of using raw materials efficiently was not appreciated to the same extent it is today. Many things that were formerly disposed of as waste are now recycled or have become the starting products for new materials.

For example, sulphur dioxide is collected in flue-gas precipitators and converted into sulphuric acid. Hydrochloric acid, a by-product of chlorination processes, is returned to the manufacturing cycle. Polluted solvents are reprocessed, and useful substances are recovered from waste water with the help of modern separation techniques. As a result, raw materials are conserved and the burden on the environment caused by emissions is eased.

Environmentally acceptable operations and responsible conduct are, to us, important steps forward in preserving the natural basis of life for generations to come.

We would be happy to provide more information upon request. Please write to Bayer AG, Public Relations Department (KI), 51368 Leverkusen, Germany.

Hanoi Hungrily Eyes Grape Nuts and Kool-Aid

By Malcolm W. Browne New York Times Service

HANOI - Fifty American companies hoping to do business here have concluded the first U.S. trade fair in Vietnam since the war ended

Hundreds of thousands of curious residents paid 20 cents each to tour the booths, called Vietnamerica Expo '94, and sample a few wares. High school teachers sent their students to the Giang Vo Exhibition Center to practice their English with the visiting salesmen, and the students often peppered the Americans with friendly personal questions.

four-day fair: Vietnamese visitors learned how to withdraw money (it was fake) from American cash machines, and American entrepreneurs learned that Vietnamese are not fond of potato chips.

The exhibition had been organized before President Bill Clinton lifted the U.S. trade embargo on Vietnam on Feb. 3. As a result, company representatives had prepared to talk business and few had brought products for sale. At a General Foods stand, visitors gawked at packages of Grape Nuts, Kool-Aid and chocolate-drink mix. but there were no samples or sales.

A Third Turkish Bank Is Closed

ISTANBUL - Authorities ordered the Turkish

Import & Export Bank closed on Sunday. The bank, known as Impex, was the third to be closed in two weeks after a run on deposits by customers fearful over Turkey's faltering economy. Impex, owned by the private Eliyesil group, has assets of 8 trillion lira ($261 million) and specializes in trade finance and corporate banking. Its current owners acquired it in 1991 from the fugitive Turkish Cypriot businesman Asil Nadic, former chairman of the collapsed conglomerate Polly Peck International PLC.

The Treasury said administration of Impex was being temporarily transferred to the state-run Emlakbank to make legal payments.

On Saturday, Impex said that it did not have a liquidity problem and was meeting its obligations. It said its only difficulty was debt relations with a Swiss bank, which it did not identify.

The Treasury, trying to control an economic crisis marked by a sharp rise in interest rates and the lira's depreciation, said impex was the last of Turkey's 70 banks to be in trouble.

The private Marmara Bankasi Bank was barred from accepting deposits last Thursday, and TYT Bank received a similar order on April II. The banks had reported significant rises in 1993 profits, attracting Turkish lira and foreign currency savings with high interest rates.

But growing uncertainty since the beginning of Turkey's financial crisis in mid-January and loss of confidence in the banking system sparked a run on small banks. The dollar has gained 115 percent against the lira since January. Last week, a legislative committee approved a bill on central bank autonomy, adding a clause to enable the central bank to extend credit to banks squeezed by sudden withdrawals in times of financial crisis.

Industry Minister Tahir Kose told the committee that the rush to withdraw deposits during crises threatened banks. "Even big banks can't resist such sudden withdrawals. The clause in the law is a security valve." he said.

Harrods' Chief Exits Fighting

LONDON - Harrods, the London department store, has parted company acrimoniously with its managing director.

Harrods said Sunday that Peter Bolliger, the executive resigned because he was going to be fired for "incompetence," while he argued that the owner, Mohammed al-Fayed, interfered with his work.

Mr. Bolliger, a 49-year-old Swiss national who had held the job since 1991, was quoted in The Mail on Sunday as saying: "There are 5,000 staff and they have to know whom to report to."

He said of Mr. Fayed: "He likes to feel he is running the company totally by himself. He will even go behind a counter and cut salami."

But Mr. Bolliger acknowledged that he resigned after receiving a letter April 7 informing him of his imminent dismissal. Harrods said the reason for his planned dismissal was the "unfavorable" result of an audit of a Harrods subsidiary of which he was president and mismanagement of funds earmarked for the refurbishment of a

Deep Cuts for Olympic Air

ATHENS - Greece has put forward a drastic plan for restructuring the indebted Olympic Airlines, including early retirement for 1,745 workers and a four-year wage freeze, Transport Minister Ioannis Haralambous said on Sunday.

Mr. Haralambous, who announced the plan to the Olympic workforce and management on Saturday, gave some further details in a radio interview. He said 1,745 workers would have to take early retirement, 950 of whom would go in 1994, and wages would be frozen at 1993 levels for the next four years.

Mr. Haralambous said the program would be presented to the European Commission in May. Greece is hoping to get permission from the Commission to write off Olympic's debt, estimated at some

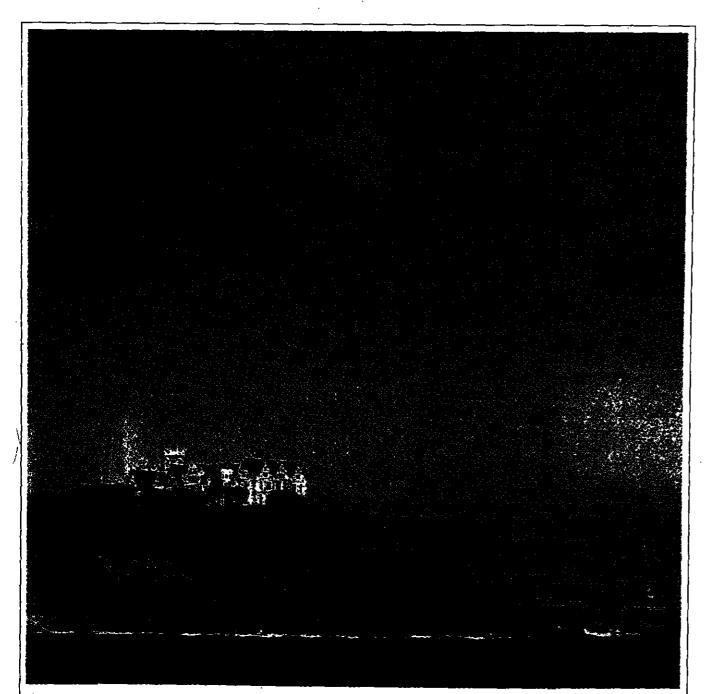

Mr. Haralambous, who became transport minister when the Socialists won national elections last October, said the restructuring would cost the state 427 billion drachmas ($2 billion).

Other measures include an immediate halt to Olympic's Athens-Tokyo and Athens-Chicago service. In a second phase, Olympic would also halt flights to Australia, Canada, Amsterdam and Vien-

For New Champ Moorer, There's Life After Holyfield and Boxing bethe most important thing to him.

By Gerald Eskenazi New York Times Service LAS VEGAS — Michael Moorer

is the new heavyweight champion of the world, but he was thinking of how nice it would be to quit. Still parily concealed behind his ever-present dark glasses, Moorer disclosed Saturday a side that he has kept from the public through much of his career. It is a career that had peaked the night before. when methodically, but also in furious bursts, he wrested away Evander Holyfield's two heavy-weight crowns with a majority deci-

His 20-month-old son, Michael II, is in the middle of the case. Moorer had been bitter all week that his wife would not allow the boy to visit him in Las Vegas. "I want to get back to Detroit and see him," said Moorer.

There is nothing else on his mind right now, he said. His body is battered, although not as badly as

"It's not important for me to unify the title," he said. "I'm 35-0 people always want to know who with 30 KOs. I'm going to make you're going to light next right after you've had a hard fight?" "I don't know who I'm going to fight next," said Moorer. "Why do put him in possession of the World Boxing Association and Interna-tional Boxing Federation crowns.

Moorer, who will earn as much as $5 million for his victory, said he doesn't care about facing Lennox Lewis, who holds the World Boxing Council title, although some boxing observers express skepticism about Moorer's intentions. They think he may want an easy light against a lesser opponent before he ninks about Lewis.

In any event, boxing will remain without a single ruler this year for its most important division. Lewis had already signed to meet Holy-field in a unification bout in November, a bout that became moot with Holyfield's defeat.

Moorer now is the seventh fighter to claim all or part of the heavy-weight crown, going back to Mike Tyson in 1990. And it doesn't appear that there will be any unifica-

To Moorer, the title brings a re-sponsibility he hasn't always exhibited, despite his perfect record. "I don't know if I can go through the burden. It just doesn't seem to show that Moorer landed an as-tounding 180 jabs to Holyfield's 36. trainer. Teddy Atlas, admitted, And it was those jabs that helped even in the flush of victory.

Atlas reluctantly took on Moorer earlier this year, knowing that the fighter frequently argued with his trainers about working out. Atlas even sat down on Moorer's stool after the eighth round Friday to embarrass Moorer into fighting more aggressively.

"He has problems taking control." said Atlas. "But after he got up from the second-round knockdown, he showed he cared."

And will Atlas stay now? "I guess so," he said, "Maybe. We'll see, Maybe I'll move on." But Atlas said he hoped that winning the heavyweight crowns would change Moorer, citing the boxing adage that winning the title improves a fighter 30 percent.

Moorer, though, doesn't appear to have a passion for the perks or symbolism of being the champion. although he does acknowledge that there is a responsibility.

"It's the epitome," he said Saturday. "There's a lot of things that come along with it. I'll just have to be ready for it, I guess He didn't sound as if he relished

Yet, he can be motivated. Atlas discovered early on in training that So when there were tough moments against Holyfield, Atlas screamed, "You're a Viking!" That motivated him, along with the unusual sight of Atlas sitting in his stool, shouting, "Do you want to change places with me?"

Passion? There must be plenty for a man to win the title. After his news conference Saturday, Moorer asked: "Why are they talking about Evander's shoulder? Why don't they respect me? Talk about Evander's shoulder takes away something from me."

He left Brooklyn, New York, when he was young and moved with his mother and five brothers and sisters to Monessen, outside Pittsburgh. When he began a boxing career, he moved to Detroit.

The times he got into trouble was when he went back to Monessen, said his promoter, Bill Kozerski Jr. Kozerski said Moorer's police problems happened because people "settle differences in the street in arrested in a street brawl that pitted blacks against whites. Two years later, he was charged with hitting a police officer, who eventually sued him and won a six-figure civil suit. And in December in Detroit, words in a nightclub led to a shouting match with two women and a fight with their escorts.

"That's behind him," said Ko-

His manager, John Davimos, said that the new champion might really not be caught up in symbol-ism, that he may be telling the truth about wanting a simpler life.

"I think his attitude is that Michael Moorer is not in this for history," said Davimos.

In a stunning upset on the undercard, Junior Jones Jones lost his WBA bantamweight title when he was stopped in the 11th round by his fellow American John Michael Johnson, Jones had been unbeaten in 32 fights. John John Molina of Puerto Rico, by a unanimous decision over Gregorio Vargas of Mexico, retained his IBF junior lightweight crown.

Nearing Florida, Yamaha French Sailboat Leads Whitbread Race

FORT LAUDERDALE, Florida - The yacht Yamaha was still leading as world-class sailing yachts approached the end of the fifth leg of the Whitbread Round The World Race.

Yamaha, a Japanese-New Zealand Whithread 60 yacht, was reported just off the Bahamian island of Eleuthera, 238 miles (384 kilometers) from the finish line, race officials said Saturday. The yacht was expected to reach Fort Lauderdale on Sunday. Intrum Justitia was 117 miles behind, averaging 11.8 knots, a knot faster than Yamaha.

"It's great to get into a bit more pressure," said Ross Field, Yamaha's skipper. "I never thought I'd say it, but I am happy to be rockin' and rollin' on our way home."

Field added that during Friday's dinner on board Yamaha, the crew consumed the last of their full rations.

On Friday, members of U.S. Women's Challenge, the all-woman crew that had been in the race, filed a $15 million suit in U.S. District Court. The crew, along with a former crew member, Nance Frank, named Yamaha Motor Co., Heineken Breweries, Ocean Ventures Management and the Whitbread Round the World Race in the suit.

It charges that Yamaha and Ocean Ventures, co-owners of the U.S. Women's Challenge's boat, interfered with sponsorship negotiations with Heineken, causing the strapped team to withdraw on Oct. 30.

SAN FRANCISCO - Isabelle Autissier called it a wonderful trip in a wonderful boat after she and her three-man crew sailed the French boat Ecurenil Poitou-Charentes 2 into the San Francisco Bay on Friday night to end a voyage from New York in a record-shattering 62 days, 5 hours, 55 minutes.

The French vessel is a light monohull with a fairly small sail area. The ballasts were replaced by a hydraulic, laterally pivoting keel. Her rig includes a bowsprit that can also move laterally.

The previous record of 76 days, 23 hours, was set in 1989 by Georgs Kolesnikovs of Canada and crewman Steve Pettengill. Earlier that year, solo U.S. sailor Warren Luhrs had done it in 80 days, 20 hours, 17

World Cup Tickets Back on Sale, in U.S.

NEW YORK - A four-day first-round, second-round and quar-"private" sale of single tickets for World Cup matches began Sunday in the United States, further confusing what tickets are, are not or States, with a maximum of 10 tickets will be available for the soccer tournament that begins June 17.

Although open to the public, only a limited number of people were informed of the sale through a letter from World Cup USA organizers, its senior press officer, Jeff Idelson, confirmed Saturday.

"It was intended to give people who were shut out in the first private sale, other members of the (U.S.) soccer family and people who have been calling the public information line about ticket availability," Idelson said.

The organizers have announced a Thursday news conference to detail plans to sell tickets made available by sponsors and FIFA-affiliated federations that had not exercised their right to buy all the tickets available to them.

• The deadline for World Cup teams to submit their 22-man rosters has been set at midnight, Central European Time, on Friday, June 3. The rosters are to be announced 12 hours later by FIFA.

• Lennart Johansson, the head of UEFA, said Sunday he supported the French federation's decision to relegate Olympique Marseille to the second division because of the bribery case involving the team, but said he was "very surprised that the judgement was so severe."

Now that the FFF has made its decision, we lift our suspension" imposed last fall, Johansson added. "Thus, Marseille is free to play in the European Cups next season." Marseille's financial director. Alain Laroche, said earlier that

Bengals Make Wilkinson Top Pick In NFL Draft, Colts Take Faulk 2d

NEW YORK -- It took the Cincinnati Bengals 30 seconds to take Dan Wilkinson, the Ohio State defensive tackle known as "Big Daddy," on Sunday as underclassmen again dominated the National Football League draft.

Now let's see how long it takes the traditionally tight-fisted Ben-gals to sign to the No. I pick in the NFL draft.

New England then took the first senior, defensive end Willie McGinest; the Colts dealt with the Rams and used their second firstround pick on Nebraska linebacker Trev Alberts and then Tampa Bay chose Fresno State quarterback Trent Dilfer, another junior. After San Francisco chose Notre Dame defensive tackle Bryant Young, Seattle went for another defensive lineman, Sam Adams of Texas A&M, making five of the top eight choices underclassmen.

that pick without giving up both their No. 1s — just the first of the two, No. 15 overall. The Niners also gave up a second and third.

Wilkinson was chosen by the Bengals despite a request by his agent, Leigh Steinberg, to trade him to a team willing to pay the more than $2 million a year he wants. Steinberg, who has repre-sented five of the last six players The 6-foot-3 (1.9-meter), 313taken No. 1, normally has his pick

General Manager Mike Brown said 21 other teams contacted him about trading up for Wilkinson but added, "I never came close to trading the pick."

Brown made light of the salary squabble, pretending to place a dollar bill in the hand of a life-size, black-and-white cutout of Wilkinson brought into the media room after they picked him.

"Signing is always a bit of a chore," Brown said. "I have faith we will get it done. We about always get it done." The Rams, who normally don't deal during the draft, and the 49ers, who almost always do, did what the Patriots were expected to do - use the fourth pick to deal to a team that wanted Dilfer. But nobody called coach-general

Each team's salary cap of $34,608,000 limits its ability to sign veteran free agents to Earlier, San Francisco traded unclear, because many free agents linebacker Bill Romanowski to the are still unsigned, so teams enter the draft not sure they can solve all their personnel problems there. And even if they do well for themselves, the crop of eligible draftees looks ordinary this year. "There is more uncertainty, more urgency than ever before," said Joel Buchsbaum, who studies the draft year round for Pro Football Weekly. "You can't take a guy and not have him contribute right away. The days when you drafted for the future are over. The future is now, because free agency can rob you of the future. So teams have to live like terminally ill patients." Some of those teams already seem terminally ill because of bad seasons last year. But because teams draft in inverse order of the previous year's finish, some 1993 losers may start getting better if they take one of the four players who rank well above the others in this draft.

Those four are defensive tackle Wilkinson, running back Faulk and quarterbacks Shuler and Diller. But even the day of the which team was uncertain.

There might be other trades. One report Saturday said a three-way deal had been completed in which the Minnesota Vikings would send defensive end Chris Doleman to the Pittsburgh Steelers for the quarters in New York City, where then send Doleman to the Atlanta up with three first-round picks in a Richter appeared screened on the shot. Plante made it 2-0 with his first NHL goal. He took a cross-ice pass from Pierre Turgeon and tipped the puck into the net off Richter's stick at 7:24.

The Rangers then took control. Kovalev scored from the dot in the right circle at 11:59 of the first period. The puck skidded over the goal line under the leg of Islander goaltender Ron Hextail, who was down. Znbov made it 2-2 with a slapshot from above the right circle at 3:42 of the second. Blues goalie Curtis Joseph didn't allow a firstperiod goal in 61 shots for the series. The Blues were outshot 12-6 in the first period but got the only goal, Phil Housley's second of the playoffs, on a power play at 7:22. By Christopher Petkanas DARIS - Gilles Pudlowski does not protest when people call him the new Curnonsky, who was born Maurice Ed-mond Sailland in Angers in 1872. "Cur" had a turnip nose and devians more conious and revolting than those of a free-range turkey from the northern Vendee. though it is of course not these qualities Pudlowski, who is handsome enough but unmistakably well-fed, seeks to emulate.

Tastemakers

An occasional series about people for whom style is a way of life

In 1927 a public referendum in France declared Curnonsky the Prince of Gastronomes. The title died with the old man in 1956. Would Pudlowski be against a revival drummed up in his honor? It does not seem likely.

Like so many food critics, Pudlowski, 43 and a particular champion of the cuisine of his native Lorraine, wears twin badges of absolute authority ("That's good/that's not") and grumpy dissatisfaction ("Nothing that has come from America in the realm of cooking has ever traveled anywhere else").

He has written books on eating in Al-sace and weekending around Paris, but the title that has made him matter is "Le Guide Pudlowski de Paris Gourmand" (J.-C. Lattès), now in its fourth year.

In it he plays the "honesty" card, sometimes roughly, penning the kind of acid reviews that inspire lawsuits, including one from Regine during her days at Ledoyen. (Conveniently, Pudlowski's brother is a lawyer.) But this can hardly be considered a bad thing. So much French restaurant - criticism is slavish, velvetgloved, mushy, empty, a yawn-making recitation of dishes and their ingredients. So much of it reeks of on-the-house cognac

Notwithstanding Pudlowski's protectionist and blinkered slamming of Ameri-ca, which only subtracts from his authority, making him seem small and silly, the English-reading, Paris-eating public would be well served by a translation of his book. Hopefully, it would not include the irritating advertisements that give the present edition a slightly dubious, compromised feel and that make it almost as much of a magazine as a book, even if there is a tradition of this sort of publication in France.

Of the restaurant La Cagouille, which other critics have found a nearly cosmic, state-of-the-art fish experience, Pudlowski writes that the service is "mocking," that the cooking navigates that netherland be-tween the almost and nearly, and that "good products are not enough (the freshness of the fish served here is indisputable) to justify the prices of a great restaurant." He goes on to recount, deadpan, how a waiter trickled wine onto the butter, then dropped a fork on the knees of a diner while clearing the table. The tima that was supposed to be garnished with ratatouille came with sempiternal baby vegetables instead. In terms of presentation, a honey parfait was worthy of a canteen. In clos-ing, Pudlowski advised the owner, Gerard Allemandou, to do some housecleaning.

La Cagouille's rating: a knife and fork for simple decor (five knives and as many forks equal grand luxe), and a plate shattered in three pieces indicating a disappointing table (three whole plates designate one of the best tables in Paris). Other symbols include a kettle (good qualityprice rapport) and the Arc de Triomphe (a place of historic interest). A bit muddled, the rating system itself needs cleaning up.

If more parallels were needed to elect Pudlowski the "Cur" of the '90s, they are easily found. Both men are seen as selfstyled literary intellectuals. "Un Petit Vieux Bien Propre" ("A Very Clean Old Man") is signed by the lascivious humorist Willy but attributed to Curnonsky. Ten years ago at age 34, Pudlowski thought it not the least bit early to write his autobiography, which posed the central question: Is it possible to be more French than the French if one is a first-generation Frenchman? One of the first things he tells you about himself is that he is a first-generation French Jew born to Polish parents.

After "honesty," the other card Pud-lowski plays in his guide is indeed the literary one. Having started out as a book critic, an activity he still pursues, he says the combination of his fanged frankness and the spunky word-driven quality of his reviews is unbeatable. What he is trying to beat, it goes without saying, is Michelin, which publishes 600,000 copies of its annual guide and which Pudlowski respects for its rigor but pooh-poohs as "mute." His other bugbear is Gault Millau, which prints 200,000 copies of its survey, and which he, who once contributed to it, dismisses as "lax — Gault Millau is always one hour behind gastronomic time." Fourteen thousand copies of Pudlowski's guide have been brought out since

Dry, restless and distracted in conversation, he agrees that his career as a food judge all simmers down to this: Will the day ever come when three of his plates mean as much to the public, as well as chefs, as three Michelin stars?

"Yes, the real issue is right there. If the reader decides l'Ambroisie is worth three stars, which is what the tire people give it, then it's I who am wrong. But if he decides it's only worth two plates, which is what I say it is, well, it means you probably shouldn't throw out your 'Guide Pud-

While most restaurant critics would agree that anonymity and paying one's own way are at least desirable, not Pudlowski. "Those are false problems, American problems. What do you want me to do. wear a mask? The chef doesn't have talent because he recognizes you. I reserve under my own name, and whether I pay or not doesn't affect my opinion. I am the guardian of the pleasures of others, my role is to remain neutral, and I have no trouble doing this. Apicius lost a plate this year, and they're my friends. We even went to food scribe. "Thinking that you have to cook in order to write about cooking is another very American point of view. My job is to write. A guy like Craig Claiborne, he makes me laugh. When an American talks of food, in any case, there's something unnatural about it. For the French, cuisine is something natural, cultural. It's in our education, our families. Don't get me wrong. I love Americans. My view of the United States is not McDonald's and Walt Disney."

Curnonsky's biographer, Simon Arbellot, wrote that tracing the gastronome's life "through the early part of the century means reliving all the gay ostentation of the 'boulevard,' and breathing again the perfumed air of what is called la belle epoque." Pudlowski has already had a good whiff.

LANGUAGE

Ways and Means: Coming Up Pronto

By William Safire

Washington — "We've come a ways in journalism, too." I wrote in this space recently. My meaning was that we've come pretty far, but not too far, had I meant to say we had come really far, I would have written a long way, with the way singular, as in the Virginia Slims slogan "You've come a long way, baby."

Why, then, did it seem more natural to write the unmodified way as ways? Maybe because we've come a way would be confused with we've come away, with its different meaning of "we've left our moorings." Or maybe I wanted to pull a little mail.

"Why not 'we've come a way"!" wrote the easily ensuared Joe Vesely, of Deerfield, Massachusetts. "I have a friend who often says anyways, and it jolts me slightly as I feel she should be saying anyway in context.

On the other hand, the cape di Gotcha, Louis Jay Herman, of New York, writes: "Your use of a ways will, of course, incur the wrath of a bevy of schoolmarms, who will reprehend you for not knowing the difference between singular and olural."

A bevy of cowgirls, according to the country singer Emmylou Harris, agrees with the colloquial usage: "I know the finish line's in sight," the words to a 1993 Lainie Marsh song on her latest album. "But I still have a ways to go." (Bevy, the collective noun, is a 500-year-old word of mysterious Middle English origin; because it is often used to group birds, and is associated with the alliterative bery of beauties, the word has gained a sexist connotation that I herewith reject.)

"The difference between way and ways has an interesting areal distribution," says William A. Kretzschmar Jr., of the University of Georgia. He carries on the work of the great word geographer Hans Kurath, and serves as editor in chief of the Linguistic Atlas of the Middle and South Atlantic States, known by its acronym, Lamsas. "Way occurs in a long band from nate with the Latin rectus, meaning Richmond, Virginia, through "stretched out like a cord" and the southeastern New York including New York City," says the man from Lamsas, pointing to a map showing additional pockets in Pittsburgh, Albany, New York, and Syracuse, New York, as well as on the Eastern Shore and in the northern Shenandoah Valley, with a mere scattering in the South. But the usage of ways, as in "a little ways," is heavy all throughout the Lamsas area, up and down the Eastern Seaboard and out toward the Midwest. "For the Lamsas survey, ways is clearly the dominant form, no matter what the handbooks may prefer."

tion of dialect is not strictly regional, but on occasion is urban vs.

rural within a region. (You knew that: city folks speak funny wher-ever they come from.)

Anyways (a Southern and South Midland dialect form of anyway, similar to the jocular anyhoo as a variant of anyhow), the linguistic atlas-makers have come a ways in studying regional English, though they have a long way to go. (I wonder if the modifier makes all the difference?) Keep at it, Lamsas;

"My wife asked me to do something or other yesterday," writes E. J. Kahn Jr., of The New Yorker,

"and when I replied Right away

she was flabbergasted. That got us both to thinking about the phrase and its origin. Why should right and away have anything to do with

This pattern of difference suggests two things about way/ways:
"Way was a feature in use early in American English, as suggested by its presence in the eastern Pennsylvania, New York Dutch, and Eastern Shore rural relic areas," says the linguistic atlas-maker, "and the Southern distribution originating from the old plantation center of Charleston." Today, the form way is a feature of the large cities of the Atlantic Corridor, influenced by Philadelphia and New York. Think about that: The distribu-

Most usage books assume that a way is the more common usage, but linguistic geographers say it seems that a ways, dating back to 1588 in this sense, may be more prevalent, and may teach us about the roots of American English.

Washington, D. C., to eastern source of rectinude, the course of those on the straight and narrow. Our curious expression about speedy action right away exists in Britain as straight away.

But what's the basis for right away, which was comed in 1818 as slick right away? (No presidential sinr intended.) It's an idiom, which means that its meanings are not predictable from those of its parts. but we can break it down with the help of John Algeo, the neologistician of American Speech quarterly, now doing his research in Wheaton. Illinois:

Right has a long history as an emphasizer: rihht affterr can be found in a document dated 1200, which was soon followed by other intensifiers of time: right in (the dawning of a day) and right now. The temporal use of this adverb for emphasis was transferred to expressions of place: right down, right up, right with you.

What about away, in its curious sense of immediacy? An early English translation of the Bible has a line with that sense: "Ye can not beare it awaye," which the Oxford English Dictionary interprets as "forthwith, directly, without hesi-tation or delay; chiefly colloquial in imperative sentences, as Fire away! = proceed at once to fire."

Charles Dickens noticed this as an Americanism on a visit here: 'Dinner, if you please,' said I to the waiter. 'Right away?' said the waiter. I saw now that 'Right away' and 'Directly' were one and the same

Let Professor Algeo sum up the development of the phrase: "Right away 'immediately' developed in American English by combining a common, ancient, and frequent use of right as an intensifier with a limited, old, and infrequent use of away to mean 'immediately' (as also in Fire away!). Right away is now in use throughout the Englishspeaking world, though mainly in ss formal language.

That does it; sorry I couldn't get around to this sooner.
